The Canterbury Association (1848-1852):
A Study of Its Members’ Connections

By the Reverend Michael Blain

Note: This is a revised edition prepared during 2019, of material included in the book published in 2000 by the archives committee of the Anglican diocese of Christchurch to mark the 150th anniversary of the Canterbury settlement.

In 1850 the first Canterbury Association ships sailed into the new settlement of Lyttelton, New Zealand. From that fulcrum year I have examined the lives of the eighty-four members of the Canterbury Association. Backwards into their origins, and forwards in their subsequent careers. I looked for connections.

The story of the Association’s plans and the settlement of colonial Canterbury has been told often enough. (For instance, see A History of Canterbury volume 1, pp135-233, edited James Hight and CR Straubel.) Names and titles of many of these men still feature in the Canterbury landscape as mountains, lakes, and rivers. But who were the people? What brought these eighty-four together between the initial meeting on 27 March 1848 and the close of their operations in September 1852? What were the connections between them?

In November 1847 Edward Gibbon Wakefield had convinced an idealistic young Irishman John Robert Godley that in partnership they could put together the best of all emigration plans. Wakefield’s experience, and Godley’s contacts brought together an association to promote a special colony in New Zealand, an English society free of industrial slums and revolutionary spirit, an ideal English society sustained by an ideal church of England.

Each member of these eighty-four members has his biographical entry. From the study of their lives emerge patterns of connection: family, friendship, political ambition, commercial interest, military and imperialist power, philanthropic idealism, Romantic fantasy, Christian commitment.

Family

Marriages across several generations laced these Canterbury Association members together in a close weave of traditional rural land-owners, mostly in western and southern England, with residences and business interests in the West End of London. For a vivid example, look at the entry for Henry Thynne Lascelles, the Earl of Harewood; here is a node of Association families including Mills, Herbert, Talbot, Montagu Douglas Scott, and Vernon. Like Lord Harewood, most were old-style High Tory, a class that inter-married within itself, accumulating and passing on fortunes and titles; heads of family were leaders in county life, as sheriffs, justices of the peace, magistrates, and ceremonial officials such as lord (or deputy) lieutenants of their counties.

Friendship

The public school and university system brought further contacts and friendships. Two dozen of the members had links with Eton College, half a dozen with Harrow School, which Godley himself had attended. Such boyish friendship grew to stronger commitment through the academic life of Christ Church Oxford (two dozen have links there), and the common room of Oriel College (eight), or at Cambridge University, notably Trinity College (over a dozen).
Some members were very clever men (notably George Henry Lyttelton, the real sustainer of the Canterbury Association). Others got to university on class prerogative rather than academic ability or application. (William Drogo Montagu—‘silly but not dull,’ remarked Disraeli.) Oriel College was the place for clever students, who were also often High church; S Edmund’s hall was the Evangelical centre and not admired. (See Reminiscences chiefly of Oriel College and the Oxford Movement, by Thomas Mozley.)

Political Ambition

Politics was a common interest. Thirty-four members served in the House of Commons, though of these five were subsequent to their membership of the Canterbury Association. Most did serve as Tories (or Conservatives) but a number of these moved across the loose boundaries between emergent parties. A few were Whigs. Twenty-seven, at some period in their lives, had a seat in the House of Lords—seventeen as lords temporal, ten as lords spiritual (bishops of the established church of England, which then included Wales, or the established church of Ireland). Others like Godley himself had careers in the British civil service that kept them close to the political world. Two members FitzGerald and Sewell had astonishing careers in the incipient political world of New Zealand. The Duke of Buccleuch, Francis Charteris, Lord Hervey, Lord Brooke, and Sir Edward Cust, were courtiers; one had the honour of carrying the ‘gold stick’.

Whether they were known as Liberals (Whig) or Tory, a high proportion was social reformist, and among them the most able and up-to-date politicians of their period. A proportion (including Goulburn, Herbert, William Baring) of the politicians were Tory reformers, who had risen with Sir Robert Peel, and had worked with him for free trade, and a careful extension of the franchise beyond their class (but not their gender). After Peel’s death in 1850 the Peelite Tories lost their already shaky coherence as a parliamentary force, and split. Gladstone rose as a lodestar for some, Disraeli picked up others, and political loyalties continued to cluster for or against such topics as free trade, extending the franchise, the civil rights and endowments of Roman Catholics, and the dis-establishment of the church of Ireland.

Most members were aristocrats in an age where the aristocrat had power, sourced either in old money from old land holdings (see Cavendish, Francis Egerton, JH Cust), or increasingly new money (with new titles) from commerce in new empire (Goulburn, Wilberforces, Barings, the Duke of Buccleuch, the Duke of Manchester), some from slave plantations in the West Indies. Bankers (Thomas Somers-Cocks, Walter Farquhar, Baring), and lawyers (JD Coleridge, JT Coleridge, Forsyth) moved between them as family and friends, and administered their commercial interests.

These Tories took up office, political and social, with a high commitment to social amelioration projects. Utopian idealists (for instance, John Manners, the leader of the Young England party); practical philanthropists (for instance Adderley, Courtenay, Lyttelton); lawyers (a score of these) and publicists; men with an interest in emigration schemes (Godley, Herbert, Hinds, Hutt) either to alleviate the overcrowding poverty of industrial Britain, or to relieve the rising pressure for democratic revolution (Godley, Lucas), or to find fertile soil for the Irish peasants after the failure of their potato crops (Whately, FitzGerald). The plan for a church of England colony attracted the philanthropic idealism of such church members.
Romantic fantasy

Romantic fantasy was the misty realm on the farther side of their generosity. The Duke of Rutland was a romantic feudalist—famous for lines artlessly penned in his youth, ‘Let wealth and commerce, laws and learning die; but leave us still our old nobility’, an attitude which carried him in fictional disguise into the novels of his political muse Benjamin Disraeli. Many wrote; the titles of their works indicate the mode of their imaginations. A number were competent Classicists, rehearsing once more for a new imperial era the glories that were Greece and the grandeur that was Rome (Blomfield, Hare, Thirlwall, Trench, Lyttelton). Books on chivalry, military tactics, the warriors of history (Edward Cust, Gleig), and Elizabathan pirates (Vaux) flood from their pens. Ultima Thule, the title of Thomas Cholmondeley’s report on the Canterbury settlement picks up the image of Canterbury as a faery land over the rainbow at the end of the world.

Military and Imperialistic Power

Educated in the expansive models of ancient Rome, stirred by the feudal adventures of medieval England, men marched for the progress of nations. Which they felt was best assured when British interests were best served. Several had been professional soldiers (like Colonel Archer, Sir Edward Cust, and Lord Harewood who fought at Waterloo), or were at least leaders of their county militia (including Lord Elcho, the Earl of Devon, Sidney Herbert, Sir Edward Hulse, Sir John Simeon). Two (Francis Egerton, Lord Herbert) were powerful in the war office itself, and four (Lord Ashley, Sir Francis Baring, Lord Ashburton, and Stafford) in the admiralty. Later, Lord Wodehouse was head of the colonial office. As chaplain general to the armed forces Gleig among the clergy members was unique, but in his interest in military heroes, similar to all the soldiers and sailors.

Commercial Interests

Straightforward commercial interests are visible in the family connections. The slave trade of the West Indies plantations lies behind the financial security of the Hinds family and other traders. The vast wealth of India gleams in the family influence of the Barings, Richard Cavendish, Maddock, Forsyth, and the Lyalls. The Wilberforce wealth came from trade with the Baltic countries.

Philosophical Idealism

Earlier colonisation schemes had attracted several Canterbury Association families, notably Hinds, the three Hutt brothers, the Barings. A principled concern shows in the campaigning of CB Adderley, Lord Lyttelton, FitzGerald, Godley, and Lord Wodehouse; they pleaded for the constitutional development of British colonies, that they might be free from the British imperialist machine. Perhaps one of the last vocal supporters of these migrant societies was Lord Shaftesbury—in 1880 he was still promoting the Female Middle Class Emigration Society.

Colonial settlement could serve as a relief for people trapped by industrial poverty and rural collapse, as a tool for commercial development of British interests, as an arena for social and church experimentation—and as a career path. Halswell, Mills, Godley, Pelham Clinton, and Wodehouse had careers in the British colonial office; John Hutt was a fairly respected governor in Western Australia.

Christian Commitment
Canterbury was initially intended by Godley and Wakefield to be a settlement for church of England members. While this exclusive attitude did not get far past the discussion stage, all the Association members were active in the church of England. Most had priests and prelates in their immediate families. (Charles Simeon provides an extreme example, with three sons becoming priests, and two daughters marrying priests.) Many of their families owned the patronage of livings—that is, they had the power to choose and endowments to pay the priest of a parish. In this system private patrons could put a friendly face (be it college or family friend) in the vicarage and pulpit, and could control the development of the parish life in line with their own principles, which were usually Tory, usually old-style Highchurch. Bishops as leaders of the church in a diocese increasingly had the patronage of a number of parishes; university colleges were traditional patrons and thus able to offer their graduates a living, but few could match the twenty-six livings owned by the Duke of Rutland.

The twenty-seven prelates and priests of the Canterbury Association are on the whole from a social stratum below the other members. Though not without connections into the landed aristocracy, the significant clergy were of an achieving upper middle-class rather than an inheriting upper-class. The fathers of some were academics (see Blomfield), of others were in trade (see Phillpotts). As senior prelates involved in many public-spirited projects, Blomfield, Sumner, Longley, Thirwall, Whately, and Wilberforce enhanced the public image of the Canterbury Association. The Irish prelates (Whately, and later Trench) were outstanding men, with a remarkable commitment to the people suffering under British rule in Dublin; the interest was certainly more than ceremonial. As pronounced Evangelicals the Sumner brothers did not match the others, who were Highchurch or Broadchurch. Phillpotts, Hook, and Lyall were powerful in Highchurch circles but not particularly interested in New Zealand—though Phillpotts’ son a sailor was killed by Maori in the Bay of Islands, a reminder of the reach of the imperial navy. Among the inferior clergy, Torlesse stands out for his commitment to the colony and for the contribution of his family members to life in colonial Canterbury. Wynter, Maddock, and Gell were but briefly involved, as candidates for the proposed bishopric; the man who came closest to being the first bishop was Thomas Jackson. However after publishing a Romantic water-coloured report on his time in New Zealand, the bishop-designate of Lyttelton had little more to say about the see that threw him back. The Canterbury Association held the model of a church centering around the apostolic leadership of its bishop: five attempts to find this noble apostle failed. Not until 1856 did the new diocese of Christchurch get its bishop, HJC Harper, and he was found by George Augustus Selwyn, the bishop of New Zealand, the only specific Association voice was that of Samuel Wilberforce the bishop of Oxford. Who did commend Harper.

Church Loyalties and Changes

The biographies of the members encapsulate the changing patterns of Anglican religious belief and loyalties through the nineteenth century. Before 1850 (excepting the Wesleyan Methodist background of Thomas Jackson) the families of the Canterbury Association were Anglican. They were members of the established church of England (which then included Wales), or of Ireland. One (Gleig) was from the Episcopal (Anglican) church of Scotland. By 1890 most families were still active in the church, but that church for a significant number was now the church of Rome. This shift needs an introductory comment.

The Canterbury Association members were mostly Highchurch, some were Broad, and a few were Low. The Lowchurch party emphasised the sixteenth century break from Rome and from medieval traditions, and characterised the church as distinctly Protestant, and firmly anti-Catholic, be that Catholic as in the church of Rome or Catholic in the Higchurh tradition of the church of England. The Wilberforces and Sumners, Adderley, and Ashley-Cooper were formed in the Lowchurch tradition, or rather in its more self-conscious Evangelical expression.

The Broadchurch tradition tended to steer clear of unprovoked party spirit. They set their individual intelligence as a strong factor in religious loyalties, and were open to new scientific learning and to the re-interpretation of Christian faith. Hare, Hinds, Whately, and to an extent, Thirlwall were Broadchurch or Liberal.

To be Highchurch was to be in an inherited church pattern—conservative (nearly always), rural-based (usually). In this tradition people were unselfconsciously loyal to the teachings of the Book of Common Prayer, they assumed that the church of England was a branch of the true Catholic church, with an ancient history visible in the cathedrals and traditions of national religious history. They were usually ignorant of (or vaguely hostile to) Roman Catholics and Dissenters, as much for nationalist as religious reasons. (Dissenters were Protestants who had left the church of England on principle, and until the mid-1800s were barred from the old universities of England. Roman Catholics could not serve as members of parliament until then.)

In the 1830s, a large minority of the English bishops and superior clergy were more or less Highchurch, in this unostentatious subdued style. Three influential High church prelates George Pretyman-Tomline (whom ST Coleridge cites with pleasure), Charles Manners Sutton (related to several Canterbury Association families), and William Howley were not long gone by 1850 and their aura glows among the older families. But throughout the century the rise of new scientific learning, revived medievalism, and an interest in contemporary Roman Catholicism were factors that were to break up the old-style Highchurch pattern.

Highchurch revival centred on a group informally spoken of as the Hackney phalanx, gathered in a network of family and church loyalties around Henry Handley Norris the rector of S John-at-Hackney in east London. The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel (SPG) and the Society for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge (SPCK) woke up under the initiatives of people who feature in this book. The Coleridges, Goulburn, Hawkins, and Hinds (as well as their mentors, Manners Sutton, and Howley) had established the National Society, to bring schools and trained teachers to the lower classes. (I have worked through The Times online to show a few examples of the buzz of amelioration schemes promoted by the generations leading up to the Canterbury Association.) They worked within the colonial office and business classes of London to get funding for the new Colonial Bishoprics Fund and provide capital to endow the new episcopal sees in the colonies.

A number of the Canterbury Association members fostered this Catholic or Highchurch revival.
Although himself moderately Highchurch and not a full Hackney phalanx member, Blomfield worked hard for these causes. Samuel Hinds had been curate to Norris in Hackney; Lyall, Hook, Phillpotts, and Gleig were among the clearly sympathetic clergy. Sarah Richardson, later to marry George Augustus Selwyn the first bishop of New Zealand, was brought up in these circles; she wrote in old age of their belief in the first decades of the century that the day was dawning when the English church would recover her true Catholic identity. (See
In a cross-fertilisation of traditions, a number of devout Evangelicals (including JH Newman, the Wilberforces, and Adderley) met the old-style Highchurch tradition but did not rest within its familiar contours. They were caught up in the undergraduate excitement of the Highchurch revival.

From 1833 until 1841 a group of self-conscious revivalists, mostly at Oxford University and often at Christ Church, produced a series of ninety weighty theological pamphlets, the Tracts for the Times. These (published by Francis Rivington father-in-law of William Vaux of the Canterbury Association) convinced a new generation of university students of the true Catholic identity of the church of England. These ‘Tractarians’ (including Godley and Adderley, and their friends) promoted such church beliefs in their worlds of politics, law, and the reform of the church. The new Tractarian Movement brought youthful high spirits into this new celebration of Catholic identity and theology, but disturbed the old quieter Highchurch assumptions. Disturbance became dismay.

A few years before the Canterbury Association was formed, John Henry Newman the most able Tractarian had continued along the Catholic continuum from the church of England into the heart of Rome. Some Anglicans followed him at once; others drew back from the brink, many Highchurch sympathisers (see W Hook) dissociated themselves from the Tractarians; public opinion hardened suspiciously against the Oxford Movement followers. From then on, Canterbury Association members reacted variously to Newman (see JT Coleridge, and JR Godley), yet persisted in the church of England—until 1850.

Gorham Judgment and effect

In 1850 the very year the first Canterbury Association ships sailed for the colony, another ecclesiastical crisis threatened public support of the Canterbury Association plans. Back in 1847, the bishop of Exeter Dr Henry Phillpotts (qv) had refused to license as a parish priest a man called Gorham: he blocked him on the grounds that Gorham a Calvinistic Evangelical did not believe that at their baptism persons are regenerated by the power of the Holy Spirit. The church of England did require that belief of its priests—said all the new Tractarians and the old-style Highchurch people like Phillpotts. When appealed to, the dean of the Arches (then the church’s final legal court of appeal) Sir Herbert Jenner Fust (father of Henry Lascelles Jenner) supported the bishop’s Catholic protest against Gorham. But that judgment did not end the matter. With strong Protestant support Gorham appealed beyond the church to the secular government for a ruling. The Privy Council judged for Gorham and against the bishop of Exeter. With a state tribunal ruling on the church’s beliefs, the rights and freedoms of the divinely-authorised church were now the issue, not Gorham.

Public protests against the Gorham judgment included one from sixty-three eminent lay leaders (among them, WE Gladstone, and Lord John Manners (qv)), and a more ominous one from thirteen signatories including Archdeacon HE Manning, Archdeacon RI Wilberforce (qv), Lord John Talbot (qv), Lord Richard Cavendish (qv). The arguments rolled on to the closing painful insult to the Catholic-minded church people: Gorham was finally instituted to his living by none less than the archbishop of Canterbury, John Bird Sumner the Evangelical president of the Canterbury Association. Henry Phillpotts the thunderously clear Highchurch member of the Canterbury Association objected to the bitter end and excommunicated the archbishop of Canterbury. Among the flurry of sixty publications protesting the ‘Gorham Judgment’ was a pamphlet by RB Paul (qv), rallying Catholics to hold firm to the church of England. So this new wave of conversions to the church of Rome hurt the Oxford Movement revivalists more than the conversion of Newman. Further embarrassing evidence of unsettlement in the Canterbury Association was the conversion of three important members (Heathcote, RI Wilberforce, John Simeon), and of Charles Griffith Wynne the brother-in-law of John Robert Godley himself to the church of Rome.

The Gorham affair and the flush of conversions fanned the flames of anti-Rome prejudice and the rising suspicions of these Puseyites. The Oxford revivalists were accused of plotting the restoration of priest-craft, the inquisition, and papal sovereignty. Suspicions were the more fierce because also in 1850, with British law changed to allow it, the pope had appointed Nicholas Wiseman as first archbishop of Westminster and head of a Roman Catholic hierarchy of bishops for England. As he headed from Rome to claim his new throne in London, Wiseman challenged the English people to return to the one true church, of Rome. His flamboyant pastoral letter, known as ‘From the Flaminian Gate’ was issued on the 7th October 1850, just as the first ships were embarking for Canterbury.

As Anglicans converted to the church of Rome, painful rifts broke apart many old Anglican families, including the Wilberforces, the Coleridges, the Heathcotes, and the Herberts. The Honourable the Revd Arthur Perceval was forced by Queen Victoria to resign his position as a royal chaplain for his championing the Catholic (Anglican) cause; her husband the Prince Consort blocked the outstandingly able but committed Highchurch Edward Coleridge from preferment. But it was even worse for the Catholic (Roman) converts—in jeopardy were friendships, family ties, career prospects. On becoming a Roman Catholic Sir John Simeon (qv) was obliged to resign his elected seat in the British parliament.

From 1850, those who remained Anglican divided. Some drew back into the calmer air of their Highchurch origins and family solidarities. But the smaller group defied everyone else: if people were being attracted to the church of Rome, then the best way to save the church of England was to make it more like the church of Rome. Not only in theology as the Tractarians had done. The members of the Cambridge Camden Society (later the Ecclesiological Society) set new standards of architecture, ornaments, ceremonies, and rituals necessary to express the true Catholic nature of the Church of England. From 1850 the advance of the Catholic revival started to register in parish churches and cathedrals across the Anglican communion in the distinctive style known as Ritualist or (in a clearly new style from the 1870s) AngloCatholic. As another generation rose to outdo the pieties of the parents, a few reached the ultimate goal: by 1900 a few may be classed as AngloPapalists — Anglicans who lived in a sequestered dreamland where the Roman Catholic church was conscientiously replicated inside their own church.

The biographies of the Canterbury Association families illustrate all these tendencies. The fallback position of the old High church world (Hook, Lyall, Longley), a shift towards the Tractarian position (Farquhar, E Coleridge, Godley, Trench, Samuel Wilberforce, Phillpotts, Paul), edging towards the Ritualist (Sewell, Lord Herbert, Hinds, Lord Lyttelton, the Duke of Rutland, Pole-Carew) and stiffening into the AngloCatholic (Jackson, Lord Cavendish, Wade, Egerton, Hawkins, the Duke of Newcastle, William Vaux, Lord Courtenay, Lord Nelson, Sir Charles Simeon, Lord John Talbot), and, towards a later generation, the AngloPapalist (junior Adderleys, junior Clintons, J Vaux). The Earl of Shaftesbury retained his uniquely fiery Evangelical hatred of all Catholics Anglican or Roman, but his grandson the 9th earl was AngloPapalist – maybe it was under the influence of younger family members that at the end of his life Ashley Cooper did soften his hostility to Catholics and even directed it against Evangelicals. Other Canterbury Association families did not take up a factious position, or their position is not obvious to me.

Throughout the century exasperation with the church of England triggered more conversions to the church of Rome. Most clear is the very high proportion of Canterbury Association families affected by these later conversions to the Roman Catholic church. By 1910, in proportions matching the Canterbury Association graduates, 84 graduates of Christ Church Oxford, 41 from Oriel College Oxford, 52 from Exeter College Oxford, and 102 (outstandingly the largest number) from Trinity College Cambridge, and 41 from S John’s College Cambridge had converted. Similarly the secondary school backgrounds show close parallels with the backgrounds of the Canterbury Association members. From Eton 93 converts, Charterhouse 15, Harrow 39, Westminster 21, 33 Winchester.

Success and failure of the Association

The rumour and suspicion that the Canterbury Association was ‘Puseyite’ was a fair summary; the vast majority of colonists and later settlers of Canterbury were not. Oblivious to the church politics of the Canterbury Association members, ordinary English people sailed to Canterbury. These issues were not relevant to the great majority of the colonists. Daily survival, the struggle to find food and to build shelters for their families absorbed them. The luxury of time and energy for church arguments would come to later generations.

What was the contribution of Canterbury Association members to their new colony in New Zealand? Much less than the visionaries had hoped. Perhaps most were just names, public figures responding to the request of a nephew or a cousin or an uncle or aunt, who had allowed their names to be printed on the handbills, indications of public-spirited good will rather than practical commitment. Those who joined the committee, and more those who were on the ecclesiastical and educational committees actually did things. However even few of these took much interest once the initial prospect faded and home careers absorbed them. A few loyal friends mopped up the debts as the Association was wound up. Few grandees had been interested enough to come and have a look at the results in Canterbury—Lyttelton commented that his visit to the colony in 1868 had been a tedious waste of time. Yet my research shows that members from the following Canterbury Association families were in New Zealand for significant periods. Archer, Aylmer, Brittan, Cholmondeley, FitzGerald, Godley, Halswell, Hare, Jackson, Lascelles, Mills, Owen, Paul, Pe1ham Clinton, Rowley, Selfe, Sewell, Charles Simeon, Somers Cocks, Torlesse, Wade, and Wakefield. Doubtless to these twenty-two might be added more, including a Lyttelton descendant, Viscount Cobham who an hundred years later was governor general of New Zealand.

Thanks to the effective work of Henry Sewell as he wound up the affairs of the Canterbury Association, the diocese of Christchurch benefited from the Canterbury Association endowments. These helped the diocese finance itself into a dominating position among the dioceses of the Anglican church of New Zealand for the next fifty years, and these continue to provide a subsidy to diocesan life.
The Biographical Entries

Names: family names and a person’s titles often differ. People appear differently named on assuming a courtesy title or a bestowed or inherited title—at his baptism William Drogo Montagu was given that Christian name, but his personal name was obscured by the aristocratic titles, so that from 1823-1843 he was Lord Kimbolton from 1843-1855 Viscount Mandeville, and then from 1855 the duke of Manchester. Again, names changed for political reasons (Stafford O’Brien), for economic reasons (Egerton, Cholmondeley, and Wynne Griffiths), or to secure a title (Horatio Nelson’s father was born a Bolton).

Titles: the first entry provides the title or styling held when the person was in the Canterbury Association. Dates are entered for the assumption of subsequent titles. The title for addressing the person in writing or in speech would often have been different from the specific title given in this entry; male aristocrats below the rank of duke were referred to as Lord—thus Lord Lyttelton, not Baron Lyttelton. Similarly women were addressed as Lady rather than by their formal title for instance Marchioness or Viscountess. Similarly, in those days, the archbishop of Canterbury was introduced formally: ‘The Right Honourable and Most Reverend, his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr John Bird Sumner’ and in address, ‘Your Grace’. Users wishing or needing to know more about these complex matters of address and courtesy titles might consult a contemporary book of etiquette.

Birth and Death: dates and places are given here from printed sources. This new edition has made great use of the material now freely-available online, often transcribed from church registers of births and deaths and marriages.

Parents: most are aristocrats. Many are from clerical families. In this edition I have looked out for priests among the aristocrats, for their presence indicates the religious ambiance of these families. Obvious connections between families are noted, either at this point in the entry or under ‘Marriage’ or ‘Connections’.

Marriage: a high proportion is of aristocratic, and of clerical families. Obvious connections with other Association families are noted.

Education: known details of school and university are given. Aristocrats were not required to qualify academically for admission to Oxford or Cambridge.

Canterbury Association: most members were there as names, and most did not function significantly in the association’s brief life. Particular contributions to the Canterbury Association are noted from primary sources in the Canterbury Museum archives, Archives New Zealand in Christchurch, and minutes books in the Hocken library in Dunedin.

Land: despite the land sales being the lynch pin for the hopes of the Association, few members purchased land in Canterbury. Some (eg Owen) bought land as a passing investment, others (eg Lyttelton, Adderley, Cavendish) largely as a gesture of goodwill and support for the Association, and several (eg FitzGerald, Brittan, Rowley) continued to buy and sell land as an aspect of their commitment to New Zealand and their family’s well-being here.

Career: the information offered here centres on the years around the Canterbury Association’s life span (1848-1852). From their earlier years one may deduce why the person did become a member of the Association, and from their subsequent years may consider consistencies and inconsistencies as well as significant achievements.

Connections: marriages, school and university, career interests, church loyalties make perceptible connections between members. Where the person’s loyalties to the High (or other) church tradition are visible to me they are indicated here.
Also:
Captain Joseph Thomas, the Association surveyor re-named features of the Maori landscape of Te Wai Pounamu (the South Island of Aotearoa New Zealand) with members’ titles and family names. I have noted these, including those which have subsequently evaporated.

Patron: of three livings; owner landed estate 4 515 acres chiefly in Staffordshire and Warwickshire Connections: By inheritance an extremely wealthy man, and by nature a generous one, Adderley was brought up in a strict Evangelical family but in his friendship with JR Godley (qv) became strongly Tractarian. He stood firmly with his friend during the development of the Canterbury Association plans.
His sister Anna Maria Letitia Adderley married (1834) FA McGeachy (qv), thus bringing the men closer for their co-operation in the Canterbury Association. His sister-in-law Mary Leigh (1826-1906) married the Honourable the Revd Henry Pitt Cholmondeley, brother of Hugh Cholmondeley, the 2nd Lord Delamere. The Marquess of Cholmondeley was a member of the Canterbury Association.
Not a brilliant writer nor speaker, Adderley was tenacious and outspoken to the verge of obstinacy and bluntness, but his views were enlightened, and far-seeing. The outline of his career illustrates his commitment to the amelioration of the conditions of workers, notably in the development of the working-class suburb Saltley, near Birmingham, and to the independence of British colonies from the direction of the British government. He was also a skilled musician and competent art critic.
As under-secretary for the colonial office in 1865 he suggested (to AC Tait Archbishop of Canterbury, to Ernest Hawkins at SPG and to the colonial secretary) the Revd John Anderson, as successor to the Tractarian Edmund Hobhouse as bishop of Nelson. Anderson was rector of Norton-le-Moors, a living owned by Adderley—where he continued until 1877.
After reading Disraeli’s novel Sybil his brother-in-law William Henry Leigh (1824-1905) the 2nd Lord Leigh was moved in his conscience to do his duty: in the London slum area in the parish of S Andrew’s Holborn, he gave the land for the building of S Alban’s Holborn; this became the most famous Ritualist church in later Victorian London. Lord Leigh’s brother, the Honourable the Revd James Wentworth Leigh of Stoneleigh was an astonishing supporter of the striking (1872) agricultural union members in Warwickshire; he was a few years rector of the church S Mary Bryanston Square in London’s West End, and later dean of Hereford.
His AngloCatholic 4th son the Honourable the Revd James Granville Adderley, a Christian Socialist, was a pioneer Franciscan in the revival of the religious orders in the church of England at the end of the nineteenth century; his AngloPapalist grandson (the 4th Lord Norton) was to be a patron and life-long client of Our Lady of Walsingham at Her shrine in Norfolk in the first half of the twentieth century.
The cliffs of Adderley Head stand opposite Godley Head at the entry to Lyttelton Harbour.

keen huntsman with pack of hounds at Trelase 1885 left £13 710 probate to Charles Gordon Archer his son.

Connections: The Archer family was landed gentry of Trelaske House, Lewannick Cornwall, with many priests and military men in their connections. The compiler conjectures that the county, family, and military links with West Country members of the Canterbury Association might have brought Colonel Edward Archer to become a member.

In 1881 Edward Archer’s brother, the Revd Charles H Archer, was the parish priest of Lewannick. A distant cousin, Charlotte Yonge a parishioner at Otterbourne in the parish of Hursley, where the Revd John Keble was parish priest, was a successful writer of Tractarian novels and generous benefactor of the Melanesian Mission. She was a relative of JC Patteson the 1st bishop, himself a Yonge and a Coleridge and a Tractarian. Edward Archer (senior) was the son of Dorothy Yonge, daughter of the Revd John Yonge of Portlinch, Devon.
The younger brother of Edward Archer, Fulbert Archer barrister (born Apr 1825 Trelaske co Cornwall) fourth son of Edward Archer senior) married Sep ¾ 1856 Mary Elizabeth Cave (born c1830 Oxford) whose sister married James Disraeli (brother of Benjamin Disraeli the Conservative PM of Great Britain) in a double marriage.
In Canterbury Fulbert Archer managed the Timaru branch of Miles & Co; Grosvenor Miles the principal owner was a leading Canterbury colonist who served for Bishop Harper on the Christ Church cathedral commission. (Another Grosvenor Miles was an AngloCatholic bishop (1938-1960) in Madagascar, and then spent some years in the Bush Brotherhood of S Barnabas in North Queensland, Australia.)
In 1882 Fulbert Archer owned land worth £14,376 in Geraldine, South Canterbury: he died (28 Nov 1904) back home in St Gothard, Painton Devonshire.

Connections: A philanthropist of a leading Evangelical family, Ashley Cooper hated socialism and all schemes of revolutionary violence, trusting the power of Christianity to effect the needed social improvements. With a mind that combined the practical with the fierce intensity of prophetic millenarism, he worked with the YMCA, the CMS, and the British and Foreign Bible Society, and other religious causes not supported by other more routine members of the Canterbury Association. Even in extreme old age he was president of such groups as the Female Middle Class Emigration Society. Ashley Cooper hated the Church of Rome and the Catholic revival in the Church of England and attacked them regularly in parliament. He advised his step-father-in-law Lord Palmerston, when prime minister, on the appointment of prelates for the Church of England; as a result, Highbury candidates and certainly Tractarians were normally excluded from preferment. In 1884 Lord Ashley Cooper wrote to the archbishop of Canterbury questioning the use by colonial bishops of the title ‘My Lord’ considering they were inferior to the bishops of the Church of England. In 1916 his grandson Anthony the 9th earl was a trustee with the AngloCatholic lay leader Lord Halifax for the AngloPapalist living of SS Mary Magdalene & John Evangelist Goldthorpe in South Yorkshire.

The River Ashley is near Oxford in North Canterbury.

Connections:
Aylmer had applied (30 Nov 1850) to the SPG for work in the diocese of Adelaide Australia, but instead arrived in New Zealand as a chaplain for the Canterbury Association. On arrival in Canterbury he waited until he was sure he had a secure income here before resigning his living in Ireland. Charlotte Godley (see her Letters from Early New Zealand) was critical of his self-centred pecuniary attitude and lack of missionary spirit. Aylmer’s ministry at Akaroa was long rather than eventful or significant. He engaged his AngloCatholic successor, the Revd WH Cooper, in acrimonious disputes, who in turn berated him as a lazy Low churchman. Bishop Harper found both these Irishmen difficult. Aylmer’s Valley is behind his parsonage house in Akaroa.

Connections: In 1837 as a member of the New Zealand Association, the Honourable Bingham Baring MP was in contact with other members such as the Revd Dr Samuel Hinds, William Hutt MP, and George Lyall senior, who subsequently had personal or commercial interest in the Canterbury Association proposals. As a supporter of the Tory leader Edward Geoffrey Smith Stanley 14th Earl of Derby (and not Sir Robert Peel) he was a useful link with the other wing of the Tory group in parliament. Bingham Baring or (as more usually known) Lord Ashburton advocated the teaching of 'common things' in National schools, the Church-sponsored schools for the ordinary people.

Like his sister Harriet the Dowager Marchioness of Bath, Lord Ashburton was a donor towards the missionary College of S Augustine at Canterbury.

The compiler offers the following paragraph to illustrate the tight-knit inter-linking of family, political, and religious leadership in the nineteenth century in England: Lord Ashburton’s uncle the Honourable Thomas George Baring (viceroy of India 1872-1876) married Elizabeth Harriett Sturt of Crichel co Dorset. The Sturt family, landed gentry of Dorsetshire, was also connected by marriage with the Bingham family of Lord Lucan (see Francis Charteris ). Another Sturt family connection was Sir William Milner senior, the 6th baronet, who had married a Sturt. This Milner family also was connected by marriage to Canterbury Association members, including the Egertons; the grandson Sir William Milner the 8th baronet was in the middle years of the twentieth century a patron and guardian of the Shrine of Our Lady of Walsingham. His cousin, Fr Napier Pitfield Sturt, the last of the Sturts of Crichel, was a long-serving AngloPapalist priest in London notably at Holy Cross St Pancras (1945-1970), the parish adjacent to a more famous early AngloCatholic church, S Mary Magdalene Munster Square. The father of Canterbury Association member William Sands Vaux, whose cousin had been a Ritualist priest at S Mary Magdalene Munster Square, was rector of Long Crichel, a living owned by the Sturt family. Fr NP Sturt was the chaplain (1955-1973) to the sisters of the Society of S Margaret in their priory in Haggerston in the East End of London. This religious community had been co-founded by Dr JM Neale of East Grinstead, and had begun their London ministry in Soho at the House of Charity (1951 name change, House of S Barnabas). This charitable work had been founded by Nugent Wade with help from Lord Lyttelton, Vaux, and Lord Herbert— all these being members (ppv) of the Canterbury Association; and later William Gladstone the prime minister. The River Ashburton, and Ashburton a market town in mid-Canterbury bear the family title.

(07 Aug 1857) obituary in The Times (411)
Blomfield, an outstanding classical scholar, worked strenuously to provide more schools, churches, and clergy in industrial London. He was instrumental in securing the establishment of the Ecclesiastical Commission, which resulted in the removal of such clerical abuses as pluralism—holding several jobs at once and collecting the income from each; and non-residence—holding an appointment but living somewhere else altogether. Nominally a Whig, Blomfield opposed the Roman Catholic Emancipation bill (1829), supported both the Test and Corporation Act, and, after much avoidance of the issues, the Reform act (1832) which reformed the electoral system and extended the franchise to more men. Through work with JB Sumner (qv) on a government commission, he ensured the reforming of the poor law.

Blomfield was moderately High church, but in the old pre-Tractarian pattern. WF Hook's son-in-law paired him with Howley in the (old-style) High church leadership for the south of England, just as Canterbury Association members WF Hook (qv) and C Longley (qv) were in the north. His chaplain, the Honourable the Revd George Spencer, was secretary to a Roman Catholic Bishop in 1830; Lord George Spencer was a popular (but ill-washed) cousin of Lord Lyttelton (qv). As bishop of London Blomfield wished to be impartial towards Tractarian clergy; however, fearful of the disturbances of the Protestant riots against them, he drove the Ritualist WJE Bennett from his Knightsbridge living, and suspended CF Lowder from his curacy at S Barnabas' Pimlico, for Fr Lowder had incited local boys to throw rotten eggs at Protestants. Fr Lowder was later (1855) the founder of SSC, a support group for Ritualist clergy, and famous for his East End ministry. On the other (High church) side of his loyalties, Blomfield dissented from the privy council judgment in the Gorham case (1850) and with H Phillpotts (qv) strenuously supported the doctrine of baptismal regeneration as the necessary teaching of the church of England.

As the responsibilities of the bishop of London included oversight of overseas chaplaincies, Blomfield particularly assisted the Colonial Bishopric Fund (from April 1841) in its efforts to fund colonial church leadership. The Highchurch party worked to endow bishoprics for the colonial churches, so that bishops would be seen to be the apostolic leaders of the missionaries lay and priestly. The (Evangelical) CMS committee welcomed the principle of bishops but were cautious over the enthusiasm of High churchmen for bishops, recognising a commitment to prelatical controls.

As bishop of London Blomfield joined Archbishop Howley of Canterbury in the consecration (17 Oct 1841) of George Augustus Selwyn as bishop of New Zealand, and (under commission for Archbishop Howley) consecrated (24 Aug 1842) the first bishop of Tasmania Francis Russell Nixon. Blomfield employed Thomas Jackson (qv) as a tutor for his children; from this connection, Blomfield became a family name amongst the descendants of the bishop-designate of Lyttelton.

William H Hale archdeacon of London Master of the Charter House (died 1870): described Blomfield as one of the best parish priests, one of the most simple-hearted of mankind and one of the firmest of friends (4)

Connections: William Guise Brittan was of a markedly lower class than most members of the Canterbury Association. This put him at a serious disadvantage in his relationships with them. Brittan in later years was a licensed lay-reader at S Paul's Papanui, taking services there as well as at the Sunnyside lunatic asylum (mental hospital) in Riccarton Christchurch. He was a member of the diocesan synod, and also a freemason. His son William Guise Brittan (junior), bursar on the staff of Christ's College, was a life-long lay leader in the diocese of Christchurch. Another son the Revd Frederick George Brittan was ordained by Bishop Harper, and lived till 1945, the last of those who arrived in Canterbury on the first four ships of the Canterbury Association. The family is remembered in the Christchurch naming of Brittan Street, Louisa Chandler Lane, William Guise Brittan Historical Gardens, Linwood suburb; and William Brittan Avenue in Halswell near their estate 'Lansdown'

Residences: Thornton Hall, near Stony Stratford co Buckinghamshire; and Crakemarsh co Stafford

1876 estate probated at £160 000, by his sons Francis Noel Mundy Cavendish, and Richard Cotton Cavendish

Connections: Lord Richard Cavendish was a forthright supporter of the Catholic revival, and a financially generous supporter of the Canterbury Association. With twelve others (including John Talbot (qv)) he was a signatory of the ominous protest (19 March 1850) against the Gorham Judgment. The Gorham Judgment, seen by supporters of the High church tradition as undermining the Catholic identity of the Church of England, provoked a number of important defections from the High church cause to the church of Rome. Among these converts in 1850 was a Cavendish from the collateral family of the Duke of Devonshire—the Revd Charles William Cavendish MA, rector of Little Casterton (and also a member of the Ecclesiological Society) and his wife Mary.

Another Canterbury Association member RB Paul (qv) had married Rosa Twopenny the daughter of an earlier rector of Little Casterton. R Wilberforce, William Heathcote, John Simeon were among the converts to the Roman Catholic church from the Canterbury Association circles. Cavendish near Ashburton named after him; also Mount Cavendish in the Port Hills behind Christchurch bears his name, and (1992) from the valley below a gondola was slung to the summit.

Connections: Like others of his old High church family, including his elder brother John Taylor Coleridge (qv) of the Canterbury Association, Edward Coleridge was a noted Tractarian. This could be a reason why he did not get preferment to a bishopric in the church of England during the years when prime ministers like Lord Palmerston and Disraeli supported Prince Albert and the queen in hostility to the preferment of Tractarians. Making the most of Eton opportunities and family contacts, Edward Coleridge was an active worker for High church causes, including the SPG, the SPCK, the National Society, and for the benefit of the Anglican church in Australia; and similarly for High church people—including GA Selwyn bishop of New Zealand, whose consecration he attended and reported; and his nephew John Coleridge Patteson (later the bishop of Melanesia) who boarded with him while in Eton college. He was a supportive friend to William Grant Broughton bishop of Australia. He waited with the Selwyns in Plymouth to see them off to New Zealand (26th December 1841) and continued to raise money for the Melanesian mission ships in support of the New Zealand church mission there. In support of CJ Blomfield’s (qv) appeal for new churches, Edward Coleridge initiated a project for building churches in Bethnal Green in the east end of London. By selling his collection of water colours he was able to collect £30,000 in the 1840s for the new (Highchurch sponsored) S Augustine’s Missionary College at Canterbury. The 1841 census provides some information but needs much work: it is interesting to discover who was living in Coleridge’s House at Keate’s Lane Eton then: as well as Edward, his wife Mary and their sons Charles baptised 30 Jun 1827 Eton, Francis George baptised 17 Dec 1838 Eton; and a Mary Hart born c1785 who might be a relative from Devon; Frances Blomfield born 1827 son of Charles James the bishop of London (qv); his nephew Frederick Coleridge baptised 25 Dec 1826 Ottery S Mary son of Francis George and Harriet (née Thwaites) Coleridge; Edmund Rodney Pollexfen Bastard born c1825 died Jun ¼ 1856 Isle of Wight buried in Devon, was the son of Edmund Rodney Pollexfen Bastard born 1784 died 1838 squire of Kitley and his wife the Honourable Anne Jane Rodney daughter of George the 2nd Baron Rodney (see [http://anglicanhistory.org/england/sac/blain_opening2007.pdf][1]); the junior Bastard married Dec ¼ 1853 Chelsea, Florence Mary Scrope daughter of Simon Thomas Scrope of Danby Hall Yorkshire JP; Robert Kennedy Peel (born 1824) Archibald Peel (born c1828 Hanover Square London), John Peel born 1829 later General John Peel) sons of General Jonathan Peel and Lady Alicia Jane Kennedy; Arthur Wellesley Peel later 1st Viscount Peel of Sandy baptised 24 Sep 1830 Drayton Bassett, son of Sir Robert Peel PM and Julia; Lord Henley, who was Anthony Henley born 1825; he married (i) Julia Augusta Peel daughter of the Revd John Peel* dean of Worcester; and became (03 Feb 1841) 3rd Baron Henley of Chardstock co Dorset; and John Coleridge Patteson nephew of Edward Coleridge and later the first bishop of Melanesia; and many more in that House.

(The Revd John Peel* DD (1828-) parish priest Stone, prebendary Canterbury cathedral (1845-death) dean of Worcester born 22 Aug 1798 Bury died 20 Feb 1875 Kidderminster was a brother of Sir Robert Peel the Prime minister who died 1850.) Edward Coleridge had a great deal of influence at Eton and through his abilities and the respect in which he was held, was entrusted with the tutoring of these sons from nationally significant families. It is largely through his sustained envolvement and strong friendships that Eton had a reputation for being especially Highchurch – in fact the mixture of church loyalties was much wider, but that Catholic strand was certainly clearly persistent and shows up in a proportion of the clergy who came to colonial New Zealand. Lake Coleridge in the foothills of the Southern Alps bears the family name, in tribute to the four Coleridge family members who served on the Canterbury Association rather than specifically to their relative Samuel Taylor Coleridge, with whom Edward sustained correspondence. He was a favourite nephew of the poet.

Residences: Heath's Court, Ottery St Mary Devon; 1 Sussex Square Hyde Park W

Connections: In the new generation from the 1830s, the traditionally High church family of Coleridge became Tractarian and more: in the wake of the Gorham Judgment John Duke Coleridge's second brother the Revd Henry James Coleridge converted (1852) to the church of Rome and became a Jesuit priest. His father, John Taylor Coleridge (Mr Justice Coleridge) was also a member of the Canterbury Association.
As late as 1871, John Duke Coleridge when attorney general gave the archbishop of Canterbury his opinion on the status of colonial bishops, recommending that the colonial office repeal the law requiring the issuing of letters patent. The British government had required that only on the government's granting of letters patent could an Anglican bishop be consecrated, even for a diocese beyond the imperial reach of the British government. This requirement implied that the government and not the church was controlling its leadership initiatives. Godley and Canterbury Association leaders from these earlier years had argued for the removal of the requirement of letters patent.

Lake Coleridge in the foothills of the Southern Alps bears the family name, in tribute to the four Coleridge family members who served on the Canterbury Association and not specifically to their relative Samuel Taylor Coleridge.

Connections: John Taylor Coleridge like his brothers the Revd James Duke Coleridge and Henry Nelson Coleridge (editor of ST Coleridge’s works) was formed in the old High church traditions. While he supported the Tractarians he did not fully endorse their Romanising enthusiasms. John Taylor Coleridge was a life-long friend to the central figures of the Oxford Movement, notably JH Newman, EB Pusey, and John Keble incumbent of Hursley (see W Heathcote). He supported EB Pusey notably during the period of anti-Puseyite hostilities (1843; see J C Wynter) and at the University of Oxford, sustained his friendship with Newman after he became (1845) a Roman Catholic. He wrote (1869) a life of Keble which he dedicated to Sir William Heathcote (qv) of the Canterbury Association. John Taylor Coleridge was a trustee of the Colonial Bishopric Fund (see CJ Blomfield).
His son John Duke Coleridge (qv) was also a member of the Canterbury Association. His daughter Alethea Coleridge married (1849) John Fielder Mackarness the bishop of Oxford (vice Samuel Wilberforce (qv)). His other son Henry James Coleridge (born 20 Sep 1822 Devon died 13 Apr 1893 Roehampton, left £144) at first a Tractarian priest continued on (1852) to become a Jesuit priest in the church of Rome.

Lake Coleridge in the foothills of the Southern Alps bears the family name, in tribute to the four Coleridge family members who served on the Canterbury Association rather than specifically to their relative Samuel Taylor Coleridge.

Canterbury Association: 27 Mar 1848 member until his death 1849
Career:
curate Cowley city and diocese Oxford
curate and lecturer S Andrew’s Holborn London
Secretary to the SPCK and Preacher (ie assistant priest) at the National Society’s chapel in Ely Place.
1824-1841 bishop of Barbados and Windward Islands, a diocese supported by the SPG
(1838) 99 clergy, 42 schoolhouses, 53 parish churches
(30 May 1838) the Codrington plantations terminated apprenticeship under an agreement signed by Bishop COLERIDGE and the estate attorney (https://www.ucl.ac.uk/ibs/person/view/4892)
As bishop he formed a diocesan committee of the SPCK, a clerical library, a daily meal society, a medical dispensary society, four friendly societies, an asylum for the coloured poor, and three societies for their education. With the trustees reorganised Codrington College and opened it for the training of clergy, 1842 after his resignation the three archdeaconries of Barbados, Antigua, Guiana were elevated into three separate sees under Letters patent from the British government
1848- until death, 1st warden S Augustine’s College Canterbury, a High church college for training overseas missionaries
1829-1838 a number of his addresses to clergy, prayers, reports were published Connections: His wife was a Rennell, and closely identified with the old Highchurch group around HH Norris, sometimes described as the ‘Hackney Phalanx’ after the parish where Norris was parish priest for many years. A nephew of Samuel Taylor Coleridge (whose public lectures he with John Taylor Coleridge attended in 1818), William Hart Coleridge was a significant figure in the network of old High church family links: the secretary for the SPCK—the old High church missionary society; a worker for the National Society (for Promoting the Education of the Poor in the Principles of the Established Church)—founded in 1811 to promote popular education in England and Wales; the first warden of S Augustine’s College Canterbury—set up to train missionaries for areas not served by the CMS. (See Horatio Nelson.) On his own appointment as bishop of Barbados William Hart Coleridge offered his mentor the Revd John Keble the position of archdeacon of Barbados, which he after some consideration easily turned down.

From 1841, the National Society trained teachers at the S Mark’s College Chelsea, and the S John’s College Battersea (see Thomas Jackson of the Canterbury Association), whence about two dozen teachers were recruited for the Canterbury settlement. These teachers subsequently contributed to the development of schools across New Zealand, most notably in Lyttelton, Christchurch, and Wellington. Many were also licensed as lay-readers in the diocese of Christchurch. Some went on to Australia. Through the second half of the century, S Augustine’s College supplied a number of ‘Augustinians’, priests, for work in the colonies of both New Zealand and Australia.

William Hart Coleridge was among the bishops who consecrated (17 Oct 1841) GA Selwyn as bishop of New Zealand. Bishop Selwyn in his old High church associations, which are not fully Tractarian, has a lot in common with William H Coleridge. Lake Coleridge in the foothills of the Southern Alps bears the family name, in tribute to the Coleridge family members who served on the Canterbury Association rather than specifically to their more famous relative Samuel Taylor Coleridge. A memorial plaque in the church of S Mary at Ottery St Mary includes him (and son William Rennell Coleridge) particularly saluting him because his ‘exertions on their behalf greatly hastened the emancipation of the slaves throughout his diocese’.

1867-1868 president of the Poor Law board 1869 supported dis-establishment of the church of Ireland.
Patron of 7 livings: North Bovey, Honiton, Salcombe, Moreton-Hampstead, Powderham, Woolborough, Don, Cofoton in Devonshire.
Residences: Powderham Castle near Exeter; The Molt, Kingsbridge Devon; the Castle Newcastle, co Limerick Ireland.
Connections: As a youth, his second-cousin William Courtenay senior, the 9th earl was romantically involved with William Beckford. In a further connection Beckford’s second daughter was to marry the father of the wife of the 10th duke of Newcastle—see Pelham Fiennes Clinton.
William Reginald Courtenay was an early member of the English Church Union, a group of AngloCatholic activists supporting the AngloCatholic clergy against persecution from Protestants in riots and courts. (The Honourable Colin Lindsay (1819-1892) was a founder of the ECU but later became a Roman Catholic; he was in 1868 a member of the Ritualist Society of S Alphege.) He was much loved by his son-in-law Charles Lindley Wood the 2nd Viscount Halifax, later the president of the English Church Union. William Courtenay, a philanthropist, was a friend of JR Godley (qv). As Lord Devon he was (1844-1845) president of a royal commission looking at the causes of Irish distress; this Tory commission replaced a Whig commission appointed by the Derby administration, under the presidency of Richard Whately (qv). Godley gave evidence from his knowledge of Canada before this commission. (Derby was Lord Stanley until 1851 when he succeeded as 4th earl of Derby.) The brother of William Reginald Courtenay, the Honourable the Revd Henry Hugh Courtenay was rector of Powderham, a family living. Another brother the Honourable the Revd Charles Leslie Courtenay (1816-1894) was an AngloCatholic priest at Bovey Tracey, where he was patron of the newly-built AngloCatholic church of St John the Baptist Bovey Tracey; he was mobbed by angry Protestants in Exeter. He was a donor towards the missionary College of SS Augustine at Canterbury, and (1868) a member of the Ritualist Society of S Alphege. Charles Leslie Courtenay married Caroline Margaret Somers Cocks, maid of honour to the Queen Victoria, daughter of the 2nd Earl Somers. Her cousin Thomas Somers Cocks (qv) was a member of the Canterbury Association. The third son of William Reginald Courtenay, Edward Baldwin Courtenay the 12th Earl of Devon converted to the Roman Catholic church in 1870. The only daughter of William Reginald Courtenay, Lady Agnes Elizabeth Courtenay married (1869) Charles Lindley Wood, 2nd Viscount Halifax. Lord Halifax (1839-1934) was from his youth a leader of the AngloCatholic movement, serving as president of the English Church Union from 1868 until (with a few breaks) his death. Lord Halifax as a young man had assisted at the House of Charity in Soho Square, where he was in contact with George Lyttelton and Richard Cavendish (qqv). Later WE Gladstone and Mrs Gladstone spent a lot of effort assisting the women and the clergy there. At his seat in Yorkshire, Lindley Wood was patron of the living of S Wilfred Hickleton; and donor (in the nearby colliery town of Goldthorpe) of the AngloPapalist church of SS Mary Magdalene & John Evangelist, its attached presbytery, and church hall. These churches he furnished with chosen clergy and valuable objets religieux collected on holidays (on occasion with his chaplain Fr Harold Painter) in Belgium, France, and Italy. In the Canterbury colony the Courtenay name was borne by the Waimakariri River for some years, briefly by a parish since re-formed as the Malvern parish, continually by a small settlement on the old coach road leading west from Christchurch. His interest specifically in the Wakefield settlement of Wellington is noted in the name Courtenay Place for a major central city thoroughfare in Wellington.

Connections: in parliament Sir Edward emphasised his support for the constitution in Church and state, and warned the lower classes against the promises of radicals. In 1840 his elder brother the Honourable and Revd Henry Cockayne Cust a canon of Windsor joined the Cambridge Camden (Ecclesiological) Society. He (and his siblings) inherited slaves and plantations from the family of Andreas Christian Boode a major plantation owner in the West Indies, was opposed to change in the status of slaves until in hindsight (1839) he regretted the process to abolish slavery had not been begun in 1823 when the British parliament had the chance. He received £5 029 in compensation for the release of the enslaved in his own family properties. Consistently conservative he was unwilling to assist in repeal of restrictions against Roman Catholics.
Sir Edward presented the church bell to the church S James-on-the-Cust, a small river bearing his name in North Canterbury. The small township of Cust developed nearby.
The Honourable the Revd Henry Cockayne Cust was a donor towards the new missionary College of S Augustine at Canterbury; earlier (1829) from their address in New Street Spring Gardens he and the Honourable the Revd Richard Cust, the Honourable Mrs Edward Cust, and the Honourable Lieutenant-Colonel Peregrine Cust each donated to the Society for the Conversion and Religious Instruction and Education of the Negro Slaves in the British West India Islands.

Land purchase: he bought 100 acres, on the south bank of the Avon River Christchurch district; February 1856 he (of Stone Lodge Spraughton co Suffolk) transferred his interest to Joseph Longden a colonist of Canterbury

Career:
Captain 71st Highland Light Infantry

1863 estate probated at £140,000, to his brothers, Sir Henry William Dashwood baronet of Kirtlington Park co Oxford, and Frederick Loftus Dashwood, he formerly of Stone Lodge in parish of Spraughton Suffolk but late of Ipswich Suffolk

Connections: The reasons for his involvement in the Canterbury Association are not obvious to the compiler. It may be significant that the family of his mother, the Rowleys, owned the living of Stoke-by-Nayland, held for many years by CM Torlesse (qv) an enthusiastic member of the Canterbury Association. Rowleys came to Canterbury, serving the church variously; Thomas Rowley was on the Cathedral building committee.

The marriage (1854) of his youngest sister, Susan Caroline Dashwood to Charles George Cholmondeley, 1st son of Lord William Henry Hugh Cholmondeley (qv) suggests family friendships. In 1851 G Dashwood paid another’s passage on the sailing ship Dominion to Lyttelton. His Christchurch land purchase further suggests a commercial interest in the project. Or good will for the proposals of the Canterbury Association, which was anxious to sell land and keep the Canterbury project afloat.

the Revd Henry O’Brien (who married Harriett Godley, sister to JR Godley); his brother, and later, two of his Connections: William Forsyth had learning and experience but as his style better suited a university fellow he did not fulfil hopes of his being an effective politician. He took a philanthropic interest in prison reform. Apart from the family interests in imperial commerce, his connections with the Canterbury Association leaders are not visible to the compiler. His sister Christina Forsyth composed several hymns. His wife's family the Lyalls was in the loose group of High church Tories known as the Hackney Phalanx; William Lyall was the dean of Canterbury (England). See the entry for William Rowe Lyall.

Lake Forsyth, draining from the south west of Banks Peninsula, bears his name.

Connections: Wealthy by birth and marriage, John Philip Gell, a friend of George Lyttelton, had been courageous to go to Hobart Town in Tasmania to begin a church school. Despite the support of (later his father-in-law) Sir John Franklin the governor of Van Diemen’s Land (now Tasmania), the project faltered, and he needed to get out. The prospect of the see of Lyttelton, urged upon him by George Lyttelton (qv) after Thomas Jackson (qv) had withdrawn, had its attraction at the initial offer (1852). With the inevitable delay by the church, state and Canterbury Association authorities, Gell lost interest in the proposal. He was said to be ‘Old Brooke’ in Tom Brown’s Schooldays. His brother Frederick Gell was the bishop of Madras, 1861-1899. He was broad-church with valuable skills in education

Godley entered Christ Church Oxford just as the Tractarian or Oxford Movement energies began to surface. He made a ‘hobby’ of reading the Tracts as they were issued over the next few years, and described himself as an AngloCatholic, a term then meaning that the person was committed to the principles of the Catholic tradition of learning and theology that had continued unbroken through the Protestant Reformation in the Anglican church. This term was the more in view with publication (1841-1843) of the Library of Anglo-Catholic Theology which reprinted works from earlier centuries which drew out the high-church cotinuities of the medieval Church of England through to more recent times. See http://anglicanhistory.org/lact/ (A full generation later AngloCatholic became a term for the advanced High church party.) In their Oxford student days, life-long friendships were made between Godley and Adderley (qv), Charles Wynne (qv), and (the Revd) William Sewell (see the entry for Henry Sewell). Roundell Palmer of Merton College was his Classical tutor.

Godley was disgusted with John Henry Newman on his leaving (1845) the Church of England for Rome. Yet this was a personal matter for him and did not entail the rejection of Roman Catholics—for he showed an unusual commitment to the needs of the Roman Catholic peasants of Ireland, and worked to have their chaplains provided at government cost in the British army. Church links were genuine and strong on both sides of Godley’s family. His sister Harriet married the Honourable the Revd Henry O’Brien the Tractarian rector of Killegar, briefly mooted as a possible bishop for the Canterbury settlement; four brothers O’Brien were priests and their sister Harriet Monsell née O’Brien, became the founder of the Anglican religious order Community of S John Baptist (CSJB) Clewer. His younger brother Denis Godley was secretary to the governor general of Canada, and secretary to the commission on Irish church temporalities during the period of disestablishment (1869-1881); he was a lay leader in the church of Ireland.

Godley with George Lyttelton (qv) and others of their circle attended the consecration of Bishop Harper in August 1856, and later made a contribution to the Christ Church cathedral building appeal. He sent his son Arthur (later 1st Baron Kilbracken) to S Peter’s Radley, a public school founded by the Tractarian, the Revd William Sewell, brother of Henry Sewell (qv); Nugent C Wade, son of Nugent Wade (qv) also attended S Peter’s Radley. Roundell Palmer (1st earl of Selborne), the cousin of Caroline Palmer who married CJ Abraham, the 1st bishop of Wellington, was Lord Chancellor, and among the Tractarians a High church leader. Palmer commended Godley to Bishop Selwyn when Godley came out to manage the new colony in Canterbury. Godley Heads, at the entry to Lyttelton Harbour; and a statue (1867 by Thomas Woolner a Pre-Raphaelite) in Cathedral square facing the Christ Church cathedral west porch commemorate him. Killegar Park in Sumner is named after the family estate.

Godley’s nephew was Alfred Denis Godley (1856-1925), a classical scholar educated Harrow, son of the Revd James Godley of Ashfield co Cavan Ireland. Charlotte Godley’s brother John Henry Wynne became an RC in 1851 as did many Tractarians after the Gorham judgement; and later a Jesuit.

Connections:
At Cambridge much influenced by the Evangelical Charles Simeon which brought him to a firm commitment to the Established Church. An intimate friend and then executor of Sir Robert Peel, Henry Goulburn began his career under Spencer Perceval, a prime minister in the High Tory tradition, whose nephew the Honourable the Revd Arthur Perceval, was a colleague of John Keble and other early Tractarians. (See William Heathcote for more information on Perceval.) Three sons of Arthur Perceval came to the Canterbury settlement and married here. Goulburn was hostile to RC claims and 'strenuously resisted all encroachments on the authority and rights of the Established Church of England' Goulburn had long experience in colonial politics and church management, as well as business interests in the West Indies. He found the problem of colonial slavery embarrassing, but considered he had done all in his power to ameliorate the lot of the slaves, an opinion not readily sustained by his efforts or achievements; his brother Frederick Goulburn managed the Jamaican estate, and rendered it ‘nearly unproductive’. Goulburn opposed (1837) New Zealand Society founders in their wish to impose British taxation in New Zealand. He stood with other Canterbury Association members in their principled stand for a clear measure of independence for emergent colonial societies. (For an example, see the entry for CB Adderley.) Goulburn was honoured by Captain Thomas with a naming on the Canterbury plain; but it has gone.

Connections: Halswell was appointed Company Commissioner for Native Reserves by the New Zealand Company (founded by EG Wakefield), and arrived (1841) in New Zealand on the Lady Nugent. During his brief services as a government officer in New Zealand, he saw the grassland plains beyond Port Cooper, later taken up by the Canterbury Association as the Canterbury plains beyond Lyttelton Harbour. In 1847 with Captain Joseph Thomas, he drew the attention of the Colonial Office to the possibilities of colonizing the southern island of New Zealand, partly to allay the miseries of the impoverished Irish. He was on the committee of the Church of England Society, a body working for church-sponsored emigration. With his New Zealand experience Halswell had a particular perspective to offer the members of Canterbury Association.
Halswell is a dairy farming community south east of Christchurch, through which the River Halswell flows to Lake Ellesmere (Waihora). Halswell has an Edmund Storr Road.

Connections: Julius Charles Hare a remarkably eccentric Broad churchman was in his early years co-translator (with Connop Thirlwall (qv)) of Niebuhr’s history of Rome. His theological writings introduced German ideas to English theology. With HE Manning, Julius Charles Hare was an archdeacon in the Chichester diocese; these two able colleagues moved apart as Manning became more exclusively Catholic. However Archdeacon Hare was a donor towards the missionary College of S Augustine at Canterbury, a High church initiative as also a member of the Cambridge Camden Society. A brother Gustavus Edward Cockbum Hare was in government service in Western Australia; in a further Australian connection, Alexander Russell, the dean of Adelaide (1882) had been curate to Julius Charles Hare and to the Revd FD Maurice his close associate and friend.
Books from his huge library (though no art from his art collection) are held in the library of Christ’s College Christchurch, where his Tractarian (and subdued Ritualist) nephew the Revd FA Hare (a son of Gustavus EC Hare) spent most of his life. FA Hare had been educated at S Columba college Dublin, a Tractarian school intended by William Sewell (see Henry Sewell) and Nugent Wade (qv) and other Tractarians to be the Irish public school, modelled on Eton.

Connections: Hawkins forms a very important link between the old High church loyalties shared by many in the Canterbury Association through to the Tractarian and rising Ritualist Movement that largely overtook or confounded such loyalties. Hawkins initiated a remarkable revival of the somnolent fortunes of the SPG; the annual income rose from £16,000 to £91,000, and in the churches overseas which it served, the episcopate increased from eight to forty-seven sees. As honorary secretary to the Colonial Bishoprics Fund, as well as secretary of the SPG, Hawkins formed close contacts with the British colonial office and missionary workers, including Edward Feild the Tractarian bishop of Newfoundland (who later corresponded with Bishop Harper of Christchurch). Other close friends were two Tractarian prelates, Francis Fulford bishop of Montreal, and John Medley bishop of Fredericton in Nova Scotia Canada;
As secretary to the Colonial Bishoprics Council in July 1845 Hawkins advised the archbishop of Canterbury about the needs of the diocese of Tasmania. From the High church connections of the National Society, he knew Thomas Jackson (qv) at the teacher training college in Battersea, and thought to propose him as the bishop for the new see of Lyttelton in the Canterbury settlement. In February 1863, he was in correspondence with Henry Pelham Pelham-Clinton (qv), the duke of Newcastle (as secretary of state for the colonies) about the precedent or justification for the archbishop of Canterbury to nominate colonial bishops. In June 1861 he (as secretary of the Colonial Bishoprics Fund) reported to the archbishop of Canterbury on the resolution of the Colonial Bishoprics Council (CBC) to add £1,000 to the endowment of the see of Brisbane, provided £2,000 was raised locally. In August 1862 Hawkins objected that the SPG and CBC were not consulted on the appointment to the bishopric of Goulburn NSW. In February 1865 CB Adderley (qv) as under secretary at the Colonial Office notified Tait the archbishop of Canterbury that he had written to Hawkins suggesting the Revd John Anderson rector of Norton-le-Moors as successor to Hobhouse as bishop of Nelson; he noted that George Lyttelton supported his suggestion, and that Anderson wished to go to Nelson. (Anderson continued as rector of Norton until 1877.) After John Henry Newman left the Church of England for the church of Rome, as one of the significant leaders of the Oxford Movement Hawkins was a rallying point for the Highchurch people in London. His wife Sophia Anna Lefroy was the sister of Frances Phoebe Lefroy, who married George Kettibly Rickards (qv) a Canterbury Association member. Their adventurous brother Henry Maxwell Lefroy was briefly in the Canterbury Association office in London, in place of H F Aiston; his father was the Revd John Henry George Lefroy parish priest of Ashe co Hampshire, and his own son became a priest in Western Australia where Henry Maxwell died in 1879. The Lefroy family and the family of Jane Austen the novelist were close in friendship and marriage. HIC Harper the 1st bishop of Christchurch sought assistance of Hawkins as secretary for the SPG in funding for Maori work in North Otago, and in recruiting clergy for the diocese of Christchurch. Hawkins’s successor as secretary for the SPG, Henry W Tucker had a significant role in recruiting priests for the
The diocese of Christchurch in the 1870s until the anti-Catholic prejudices of some local Church leaders alienated his support. (See Carlyon, in http://anglicanhistory.org/nz/blain_directory/)

1870 PC
1883 estate probated at £46 023, to Thomas Richard Frederick Cooke Trench of Millicent Naas co Kildare Ireland and son Arthur Malcolm Heathcot e of Woolley Green co Southampton

Connections: Sir William in 1834, joined Sir Robert Inglis the very Tory MP for Oxford University, and William Palmer in preparing a declaration to be submitted to Howley the archbishop of Canterbury, protesting that the privileges of the established Church of England were at risk in the Whig political atmosphere of the day. (Palmer was a committee member for the Library of AngloCatholic Theology project.)

On inheriting from his uncle Archdeacon Heathcote both the baronetcy and the patronage of the living of Hursley, Heathcote was able to appoint (1836) his beloved tutor at Oriel college the Revd John Keble to the living. In the parish, he built the Ampfield church. Keble was significantly representative of those in the old High church school who were to become leaders of the new Oxford Movement. However, Heathcote converted to the Roman Catholic church in 1850—a difficult moment for those sensitive to criticism of the Puseyite and Romish character of the Canterbury Association.

His first wife, a niece of Spencer Perceval, the British prime minister assassinated in 1812, was sister to the Honourable the Revd Arthur Perceval (1799-1853), 5th son of the 2nd Baron Arden. With J Keble, HJ Rose, William Palmer (of Worcester College), and RH Froude, Arthur Perceval was an initiator (July 1833) of the Tractarian Movement. (Keble, Palmer, and Perceval were committee members for the Library of AngloCatholic Theology project.) Although an author of these Tracts for the Times, he resented the fast development of the Oxford Movement beyond the old High church style he represented, a resentment deepened by his sense of being sidelined by more enthusiastic younger men. He was deprived (1850) by Queen Victoria of his royal chaplaincy because of his opposition to the Gorham Judgment and his championing of Catholic belief in the church of England. (See Henry Phillpotts of the Canterbury Association for more about Gorham.)

In the Canterbury Association, the Honourable the Revd Arthur Philip Perceval rector East Horsley co Surrey, bought 50 acres in Christchurch district, for which his son Augustus Perceval signed. Three of his sons, Augustus George, Charles John, and Spencer Arthur came to New Zealand and surprised local people who did not expect aristocrats to behave as they behaved. However Spencer Arthur Perceval married (1858) Marianne Dunnage the daughter of a Canterbury Association priest in Christchurch. At the foot of the Port Hills east of Christchurch, Heathcote valley and Heathcote river bear his name.

Connections: Sidney Herbert was a generous and charitable promoter of emigration programmes, and of Oxford Movement causes.

He and his wife erected a model lodging-house at Wilton for agricultural labourers, and took a personal share in promoting emigration.

Both on his Wiltshire estates and at Donnybrook near Dublin Herbert laid out large sums in improvements, and built or contributed to the building of many churches, especially that at Wilton upon which he spent £30,000, with imported Italian mosaics amongst its questionable decorations.

He endowed the AngloCatholic centre of St John the Evangelist church in Sandymount Dublin. Herbert with Pelham Clinton (qv) (then Lord Lincoln) invested in the Morning Chronicle the organ of the Peelite reformist Tories (from February 1848), and on its sale (1854) he is said to have lost £116,000.

JR Godley had often contributed to this periodical, which was later absorbed into the Daily Telegraph.

During the Crimean war, Herbert reformed the hospitals and nursing service, cooperating with Florence Nightingale. The Army Medical school at Chatham was established under his auspices.

In 1844 the Honourable George Herbert joined the Cambridge Camden (Ecclesiological) Society.

After Herbert’s death his widow, who with Charles Lindley Wood (afterwards Lord Halifax) had assisted the Anglican Sisters of S Margaret in their initial work in S Mary’s Crown St Soho, converted (1866) to the church of Rome. It is of interest that his daughter Lady Mary Catherine Herbert also became (1873) a Roman Catholic on her marriage to the famous Roman Catholic theologian and philosopher, Baron Frederick von Hugel.

Mt Herbert is the highest hill on Banks Peninsula, above Lyttelton harbour.

06 Nov 1838 the newspaper contains a substantial write-up on the 'eager avarice and extensive machinations of the New Zealand Associationists'; John Flatt (formerly with the CMS) is taken as a strong witness of these failings; then Hinds, 'who has no personal or experimental knowledge of the New Zealanders' also deposes as a committee member of 'the Association' and explains his reasons for supporting such colonisation; but the argument continues against him for encouraging the natives to be 'swindled out of their territory and deprived of their sovereign rights' (The Times)

Connections: The Hinds family made their money in the sugar plantations worked by slaves on Barbados in the West Indies. The Revd Dr Samuel Hinds (with the Honourable Bingham Baring MP, William Nutt MP, and George Lyall, all later associated with the Canterbury Association) was a member (1837) of the New Zealand Association.

Among his writings is (1838) On the Colonisation of New Zealand; he urged the SPG to send a chaplain with the New Zealand Company to the settlement in Wellington; Frederick Churton was sent. (See Churton in the Blain Biographical Directory.)

According to Mozley (an intelligent cleric who wrote fascinating), Samuel Hinds had been curate to Henry Handley Norris at S John Hackney, the centre of the (soi disant) Hackney phalanx. He was working briefly with Bishop W H Coleridge (qv) at Codrington College in Barbadoes. Later, while chaplain to Richard Whately (qv) then the archbishop of Dublin, Hinds met John Robert Godley (qv) as proposals for settlement in Southern New Zealand were shaping up. He was on the committee of the Church Society for New Zealand founded in 1840 to assist the education and religious development in New Zealand colonial settlements, including for the local Maori people. During his time of service (1845) as lord lieutenant of Ireland, Frederick Cavendish Ponsonby the 3rd earl of Bessborough had the Revd Samuel Hinds as his chaplain. Emily C Bathurst married the Honourable Sir Frederick Cavendish Ponsonby KCB, son of Frederick Cavendish Ponsonby 3rd earl of Bessborough; she supported the Canterbury Association by purchasing 50 acres Christchurch district, for which a well-known colonist Edward Ward signed. Mozley thought very little of Samuel Hinds. He wrote that he was 'unfit for business' and a little mad; that he was a close follower of Whately; that he became an increasing liability to Whately in Dublin; that it was Whately and Lord Clarendon who commended Hinds to Lord John Russell the Whig premier so that he might get preemption to the see of Norwich and be gone. Several significant clergy (Keble, Mill, Newman) made objection to his confirmation as bishop of Norwich on the grounds of his writings being possibly heretical; Charles Marriott however thought them not.

Samuel Hinds was curate to H H Norris a central figure in the loose grouping of old-style highchurch leaders known latterly as the Hackney Phalanx; many of that generation resented the rise of the Oxford movement (J Burton dean of Chichester is a strong example) but Hinds appears to have expanded his loyalties and was even considered latterly to be an 'advanced' highchurch person, albeit an ineffectual leader. In politics he was a moderate liberal.

A town Hinds, on the River Hinds south of Ashburton, bears his name.

Connections: Hook was a strongly individual leader in the High church tradition, shaped initially by Sir George Pretyman-Tomline, a bishop of the old ‘High and dry’ or ‘Orthodox’ school. As bishop of Lincoln (1787-1820) and then bishop of Winchester (1820-1827), this bishop had an important influence on the loose association of London High church clergy and laity, known as the Hackney Phalanx, a counter-group to the (Evangelical) Clapham Sect. (See the Wilberforce entries for a reference to the Clapham Sect.) The families of Sarah Richardson who married GA Selwyn, later bishop of New Zealand, and of Caroline Palmer, who married CJ Abraham, later bishop of Wellington, were closely identified with this group. For Abraham, and Selwyn, and other associates see http://anglicanhistory.org/nz/blain_directory/
In Coventry and in Leeds Hook was an active supporter of the Ten Hour Movement. He was arguing for a shorter working day, of only ten hours, for working people in these harsh industrial cities. Hook was a committee member for the Library of AngloCatholic Theology project. He was described by his son-in-law as being with Charles Longley (qv) one of the upholders of the High church traditions in the north of England just as in the south Blomfield (qv) and Howley. Hook went along with much of the Catholic revival in the Church of England, but fell out with EB Pusey over alleged ‘Romish’ practices, which he considered disloyal to the Catholic traditions of the Church of England. JH Newman’s leaving for the RC church drew him back strongly from any association with the upcoming Ritualist generation of the Oxford Movement. He declared himself an enemy of ‘Romanism’ and ‘Puseyism’ and for these errors (as he saw them) attacked the AngloCatholic clergy of the new Saviour’s church in Leeds, a church which Pusey had paid to have built. He denounced the schism of Dissenters and would not recognise the Dissenting Churches as any part of the Church. A Tractarian protégé and teacher from Hook’s Leeds ministry the Revd CHS Nicholls was among the Canterbury Association chaplains who came to Lyttelton in 1851. He was denigrated here as a Puseyite by his CMS contemporaries in Wanganui. The dean’s son the Revd James Hook died in 1877; after service in the rifle brigade through the Indian Uprising, he was ordained and instantly vicar of Morton.

Land purchase of 600 acres Lincoln Rd, in trust for Ecclesiastical and Educational fund

Career:

- Until 1850 principal S John’s Training College Battersea (for teachers, under the National Society, see William Hart Coleridge)
- 1850 bishop-designate for proposed diocese of Lyttelton, Canterbury
- 1852-1886 incumbent Stoke Newington S Mary’s Middlesex London
- 1853 he severed all connections with the Canterbury settlement by transferring all lands in New Zealand in his name over to GA Selwyn bishop of New Zealand, and C J Abraham bishop of Wellington.

Connections:

- Thomas Jackson was from a family of leading Wesleyan Methodists, though swiftly a member of the Established Church himself; in the 1830s he had been a tutor to the children of CJ Blomfield (qv) whose surname he gave as a forename to his own son – Blomfield Jackson. On the advice of Ernest Hawkins (qv) Jackson was taken from his work of training lay teachers to be the bishop for Lyttelton. His lower middle class origins and his personal style disconcerted the leaders of the Canterbury Association, who for his purported extravagance and unrealistic notions, obliged him to resign his appointment as bishop for the proposed see. Clearly a classist clash of style and culture – he did not fit.
- Jackson authorised the selection, payment, equipping, and passages of the chaplains for the Canterbury Association ships (and thus for the few positions funded in the new colony), and of the teachers (largely recruited from the graduates of S John's Training College Battersea) for the schools proposed for the Canterbury settlement.

The endowments of Christ's College Christchurch were secured from Jackson's land purchases. On his costly visit to the incipient colony, among many items for schools and churches Jackson brought out two wooden travelling candlesticks for the altar in the Lyttelton church, extant in Holy Trinity church Lyttelton. (For more on Jackson, as well as on all the chaplains and clergy of the Canterbury Association ships, see http://anglicanhistory.org.nz/blain_directory/). Thomas Jackson continued as a famous preacher in North London, where he developed Ritualistic tastes. To offset this tendency, his lower church son (also a priest) ministered where he could be consistently Low church, from a new church built (to the designs of Gilbert Scott) opposite the medieval parish church in which his father grew steadily higher.

Residences: Langley Hall, and Denford Court, co Berkshire; Betteshanger co Kent; and Jarrow Grange, co Durham.
Connections: Walter James, a college friend of Godley, advanced £500 to the Canterbury Association for the Ecclesiastical and Educational Fund, in generous hope that a church grammar school might be established in the Canterbury colony. Soon Christ’s college did evolve.
The James family built and endowed a new church for Betteshanger (1850) dedicated under the patronage of S Mary the Virgin, the title of the principal church at Oxford University, where John Henry Newman had ministered so powerfully as an Anglican priest and influenced the world of Walter James and many contemporaries. With a similar salute to Newman and Oxford, Henry Sewell (qv) gave land and endowed a new church under the patronage of S Mary the Virgin in Addington, Christchurch. Walter James in the will of John Robert Godley was named guardian of Godley’s children. Sarah James, his daughter, married (1871) Godley’s son John Arthur Godley. John Arthur Godley had previously worked as private secretary to WE Gladstone, the Liberal Prime Minister of Great Britain, himself a close friend (for political reasons) of George Lyttelton and of the Canterbury Association initiative. But again for political reasons Gladstone declined Lord Lyttelton’s invitation to become a member himself. (Two of Gladstone’s sisters and a brother became Roman Catholics.)

with links to Walsingham. (For Walsingham, see CB Adderley). Perhaps Eton College and Trinity College

Patron 3 livings: Goldsborough, Weeton, and Harewood in Yorkshire.
Residences: Harewood House Leeds; Harewood House, 13 Hanover Square London W.
Connections: The Lascelles family intertwines with many High Tory families, including those of Canterbury Association members Arthur Mills, John Talbot, Granville EH Vernon, and Montagu Douglas Scott—these family connections provide a reason for his formal membership of the Canterbury Association.
A fascinating cross-generational connection has been found. The father of Henry Thynne Lascelles, Henry Lascelles the 2nd earl of Harewood, was first cousin to the mother of Henry Lascelles Jenner, and stood as godfather at the latter’s baptism; Henry Lascelles Jenner, a member of SSC, was the ill-fated Ritualist bishop ordained for the new diocese of Dunedin by Archbishop Longley. See the entry for Charles Longley; for Bishop Jenner see http://anglicanhistory.org/nz/blain_directory/).
The Societas Sanctae Crucis (SSC), an association of clergy promoting AngloCatholic piety and faith, was feared by most Anglican prelates and all low church people who had heard of its secret habits. They saw all members of SSC as Romanisers undermining the Church of England with Italianate loyalties.
In 1852 after the Gorham Judgment (09 Mar 1850), the brother of his wife (Louisa Thynne), the Honourable the Revd Charles Thynne (of Harrow school, and Christ Church Oxford), with his wife Harriet Frances Bagot (daughter of Richard Bagot, bishop of Oxford 1829-1845, in which see he was succeeded by Samuel Wilberforce (qv)), converted to the church of Rome; Charles later became a Roman Catholic priest. The Honourable the Revd John Thynne was rector of Walton-cum-Strete near Glastonbury and subdean of Westminster. Lord John Thynne was a close friend of the Ritualist agitator and controversialist Archdeacon George Denison of the diocese of Bath and Wells. Thynne’s curate (1843-1844) was the Revd Charles Fuge Lowder, an AngloCatholic priest famous through his long ministry at S Peter’s London Docks. There in the east end of London Fr Lowder centred the new network of AngloCatholic priests known as SSC, mentioned above.
Harewood Forest (now logged out) beyond Oxford in North Canterbury, and the once rural district of Harewood around the Christchurch airport were given his title.
The obituary for Lord HAREWOOD explains his death: he was riding a favourite old mare hunter and ‘was attempting to “brush” through a young thorn hedge when the animal stumbled over a sheep net at the other side, and threw the noble lord over her head’. (24 Feb 1857 The Times)
His son Henry Thynne Lascelles 4th earl of Harewood had three years of discussion with the local Wesleyans; as a result his lordship abolished these restrictions on them on the Harewood estate: 1 no Wesleyan services during church hours, 2 no Sunday school and their (allowed) bible class not during church hours on Sunday, 3 the Sacraments of Baptism and the Lord's Supper should not be administered: his lordship now abolished these restrictions; and the nominal rent at 5 shillings per year for a building they used was raised to £5. The Wesleys now desired further concessions with reference to the village of Dunkeswick. (16 Apr 1888 The Times)

1869 estate probated at £45,000 to the Honourable Henry William Parnell of Bryanston Square Middlesex, the Revd John Robert Hall of Hunton Kent, and son Henry Longley of Lincoln’s Inn co Middlesex Connections: The Canterbury Association naturally invited the leading prelates of the Church to be members or patrons. Thus Thirlwall the leading bishop of Wales, Whatley the archbishop of Dublin, Longley as archbishop of Canterbury are on the list.

At Harrow school Charles Longley had been headmaster to JR Godley (qv).
A liberal in politics, in church matters Longley with WF Hook (qv) in the north (as in the south of England, Blomfield and Howley) was taken to be a sturdy leader in the old Highbury tradition. However he was anti-Ritualist: as bishop of Ripon he aroused much feeling through his suppression of the Romanizing customs at EB Pusey’s newly built church (1845) of Saviour’s Leeds, which was in his diocese. Dr Hook backed him, and he showed ‘great firmness and moderation’ in dealing with the problems. He was man of ‘broad sympathies’ with ‘cultivated tastes out of the beaten track of the ordinary clergy’. At Canterbury he was patron of 200 livings. Later when he had become archbishop of Canterbury, at the request of GA Selwyn, the bishop of New Zealand, Longley chose (in January 1866) a bishop for the new see of Dunedin: he consecrated (on the 24th August 1866) a musical but (perhaps unfortunately) a Ritualist priest, Henry Lascelles Jenner, a member of SSC, who was obliged after years of controversy to resign (in June 1871) his claim to the see of Dunedin. (See the entries for WH Pole Carew, Henry Thynne Lascelles) When archbishop of Canterbury, Longley now the senior bishop of the spreading Anglican communion called together the bishops of the Anglican communion for the 1st Lambeth Conference. Many of these bishops from Britain, North America, New Zealand and Australia, and other regions, met (in September 1867) at Lambeth in South London, under his presidency. This is the most interesting thing Longley did in his long life.

Connections: Lucas’s interest in revolutionary movements (and how to avoid them), and in North America, provided a background for his membership of the Canterbury Association. He was brought up with a view to business but his taste for literature and learning brought him to enter himself at Queen’s college Oxford, where he formed a close friendship with William Thomson (1862-1890) archbishop of York. He was a friend of the novelist poet George Meredith, and published several of his poems and stories in his magazine Once a Week.
Benjamin Disraeli associated with him (1853) and wrote of him as a friend of McGeachy (qv).
Otherwise his personal connections are not known to the compiler.

Connections: Lyall, who was in the London cluster of High church lay and priest leaders known as the Hackney Phalanx, owed his early preferment to William Howley, an archbishop (1828-1848) of Canterbury who promoted High churchmen—a custom not followed by his Evangelical successor JB Sumner, who appointed Evangelicals. In this penchant Sumner had the support of the Queen Victoria and her Prince Consort who was Lutheran.
Lyall succeeded Hugh James Rose as rector of Hadleigh; Rose was an honoured old High church figure, an important leader at the beginning of the Oxford Movement, (1832) editor of the British Magazine; at his rectory in Hadleigh from a meeting with Hurrell Froude and William Palmer came the Association of Friends of the Church; this activity was to lead directly into the Tracts for the Times and the consequent 'Oxford movement'.
His elder brother George Lyall was a director of the East India Company which in those days ruled India.

Connections: Generous all his life, but with a dozen children always poor, George Lyttelton is the reason why the plans of the Canterbury Association actually did come to something. Through their work together for the Canterbury Association, he and John Robert Godley and Henry Selle Selfe became dear friends. Otherwise in the course of his normal county life this county magnate would not have come across either of them.

George Lyttelton married Mary Glynne, from a High church family that had become (like himself and his family) increasingly Tractarian; and with them was much influenced by WE Gladstone then much stirred by the Tractarians.

Mary’s father Sir Stephen Glynne was a trustee for the building of the Butterfield architectural masterpiece All Saints Margaret St, a major AngloCatholic centre off Oxford Street in the West End of London.
In 1916 Maurice George Carr Glyn [born 12 Mar 1872 died 20 Aug 1920 son of the Honourable Pascoe Charles Glyn son of the 1st Baron Wolverton] was a trustee with Viscount Halifax and Lord Shaftesbury (Ashley Cooper) for the AngloPapalist church of St Mary Magdalene and John Evangelist Goldthorpe in South Yorkshire. (see Ashley Cooper, for more on his grandson of the same name.)

George Lyttelton was associated with a variety of Tractarian causes, including the first Anglican sisterhoods (of women in religious orders). He was a friend of Dr Charles Vaughan, headmaster (1844-1849) of Harrow, later a commissary for Christ’s College in its regular search for headmasters, and for Bishop Harper in his constant search for competent clergy for the diocese of Christchurch. He assisted Fr John Chambers (Master of SSC in 1868) and those working with him at the House of Charity in Soho Square; other such included Richard Cavendish, and Charles Lindley Wood later the 2nd Viscount Halifax. (See Richard Cavendish, William Reginald Courtenay, and Nugent Wade, all of the Canterbury Association.)

Greatly interested in education, George Lyttelton worked for the establishment of the Oxford and Cambridge Local Examinations throughout the Midlands.

He was with CB Adderley (qv) a founder of the Saltley Church Training College, and its president for many years. The sea port Lyttelton was expected to be the see city of the Canterbury plan; thus the leading town of the Canterbury settlement would have born his name, but the major port of Canterbury does.

From 1848 names were considered and five men approached to be the bishop of this proposed see of Lyttelton. (See Gell, Jackson, Maddock, Torlesse, Wynter for more about proposed bishops for the proposed see.) The city of the plains Christchurch soon overtook the land-locked port of Lyttelton, and itself became the provincial centre – by the time the sixth episcopal choice, HIC Harper, was approved as the bishop for the new colony, the see title had changed as well. Thus years later on the 25 December 1856, Bishop Harper was enthroned in St Michael and All Angels (temporary) church in Christchurch as the (1st) bishop of Christchurch.

George Lyttelton's AngloCatholic daughter Lucy Caroline married Lord Frederick Charles Cavendish MP (of the leading Whig family in England); who was assassinated (1882) in Phoenix Park Dublin.

His daughter Lavinia married Edward Stuart Talbot, son of the Honourable John Talbot (qv): their son became the Superior of the Community of the Resurrection Mirfield, a religious order for men in the Church of England.

His son Arthur Temple Lyttelton became the suffragan bishop of Southampton, an assistant to the bishop of Winchester.

Lyttelton harbour and its port town continue to bear the name of George Lyttelton’s family, and Hagley Park the central Christchurch park bears the name of his seat.

Connections: This priest does not stand out for any particular merits beyond the connections, to Bishop Edward Grey and his brother Earl Grey, as well through the Church to CJ Blomfield (qv). He was curate to his father-in-law who became his bishop and as patron appointed him to Kington. Henry William Maddock was (February 1850) proposed by JC Wynter (qv) as the bishop of Lyttelton which offer from the Canterbury Association he (like Wynter before, like Gell and Torlesse after) rejected, before the offer was made fifthly (in May 1850) to Thomas Jackson (qv). The Canterbury Association failed to provide this key element for their free Anglican Church settlement. In the end it was the initiative of George Augustus Selwyn, bishop of New Zealand who brought forward his old tutor and friend Henry John Chitty Harper, who proved exactly appropriate as the 1st bishop of Christchurch.

The Grey family was extremely important for the social reforms in England and the empire. Henry William Maddock’s eldest brother Sir Thomas Herbert Maddock, was deputy governor of Bengal and president of the Council of India. This connection again illustrates the powerful connections of these Canterbury Association members, connections which reach around the world in the extending British commercial, and imperial ventures, as well as in the less powerful but closely connected world of church outreach.

It may be of interest that a few years after Maddock was a curate there, the Revd Bryan King was perpetual curate of St John Bethnal Green (1838-1842); later in the century St John’s was a Ritualist centre. King himself was at the centre of the anti-Ritualist riots at the church St George-in-the-East, London, where after sustained attacks on him and disruptive riots around his church he retired in broken health; his grandson, also Bryan King, as a priest under Bishop Nevill of Dunedin developed social work in the diocese of Dunedin.

1841 poem, Memorial of Other Lands, with the lines, ‘Let wealth and commerce, laws and learning die; but leave us still our old nobility!

Residences included: Belvoir Castle Grantham; Cambridge Gate Regents Park London; St Mary’s Tower Birham Scotland

Connections: Lord John Manners’ youthful crusades included an urge to restore Don Carlos as absolute monarch of Spain, and to Gothicise the Foreign Office. His Utopian ‘Young England’ associates were George Smythe (Lord Strangford), Benjamin Disraeli, Bulwer Lytton. His visit (1838) to the Revd Frederick Faber, at Ambleside in the Lake District developed into a romantic friendship between him, George Smythe, and Faber. Later as a Roman Catholic priest, Faber became the founder of the Brompton Oratory in London’s West End; and penned a pile of hymns in the fullest spirit of the Counter-Reformation. These poems drip with ecstatic emotion, and apart from a few exceptional verses cannot be sung today.

In 1844 Lord John Manners initiated a meeting at his quarters in The Albany (Piccadilly) in London to foster the formation of a sisterhood, in memory of Robert Southey the late poet laureate, who had romantically favoured the notion of Anglican nuns. Those interested included George Lyttelton (qv), (Sir) Thomas Dyke Acland (see Arthur Mills with whom he was connected), William Ewart Gladstone (later the great Prime minister of Great Britain), Edward Bouverie Pusey (the eponymous hero of the Puseyites, the followers of the ongoing Oxford Movement), and Walter Farquhar Hook (qv). These first Sisters of Mercy started their corporate life as nuns at Park Village West near Regent’s Park in North London. Charles Blomfield (qv) as bishop of London was very cautious in his support of this initiative, which soon was to bring about a revival of the religious orders for both men and women in the Anglican church.

Manners was a wealthy enthusiast, always a staunch defender of the Church of England, and an early member of the Cambridge Camden Society (the High church revivalist group with aesthetic interests, later known as the Ecclesiological Society). He was also chairman for the Tithe Redemption Trust (which improved the management of the resources to fund payment of parish clergy) and, illustrating his interest in the theory of the church in a free colony, published (in 1851) a lecture The Church of England in the Colonies.

A personal story - Fred Webster onetime churchwarden at the church of SS Mary Magdalene and John the Evangelist Goldthorpe told me in 1968 of his visiting his uncle a gardener at Belvoir castle; they were trimming rose bushes when he was told to crouch down behind the bushes, for the duke was coming in the gates, his carriage drawn by four plumed horses, and four link boys in livery and knee-breeches bearing torches were running alongside the carriage – this was about 1900, and so the duke was John Manners.

Connections: McGeachy was a friend of John Robert Godley (qv), and he married the sister of Charles Bowyer Adderley (qv). His speech in parliament on the Maynooth college bill indicates an interest (like Godley) in Ireland and the RC church there. Benjamin Disraeli wrote of him (1853) as a friend of Samuel Lucas (qv). With a reputation for having successfully laid the foundation of new Church of England public schools such as Marlborough, McGeachy was called into the Canterbury Association to assist the development of the college for Canterbury, which did later become Christ's College. His work as MP for Honiton would bring him in contact also with the Coleridge family of Ottery St Mary and their colleagues.

Connections: Arthur Mills was a friend and protégé of John Keble. His brother-in-law Sir TD Acland was a donor towards the missionary College of S Augustine at Canterbury.
He was up at Oxford with his friend Godley (qv), in the same college and years as RW Sackville West, 7th Earl De la Warr. Like a number in the Canterbury Association, Sackville West was a member of the Cambridge Camden Society (Ecclesiological Society).
The forenames of Arthur Mill’s elder son Barton Reginald Vaughan Mills mark the connections with the Acland family, and also with Dr Charles Vaughan. Vaughan was a friend of George Lyttelton, became headmaster of Harrow School, and was later Bishop Harper’s commissary both for diocesan clergy, and masters for Christ’s College Christchurch.
Barton Mills an Anglican priest was vicar (1891-1901) of Bude in Cornwall, on a stipend of £170 a year, a sum a little less than his contemporaries (among them, his distant relatives) received in the diocese of Christchurch New Zealand. The patron of Bude parish was his father-in-law Sir Thomas Dyke Acland. On his resignation from Bude (in 1901) Barton Mills published The Marks of the Church and in consequence found the marks of the true church outside the church of England – he converted to become a Roman Catholic lay person. He died 21 Jan 1932.
Arthur Mills’ cousin Sir Charles Henry Mills, baronet, married (1853) the Honourable Louisa Isabella Lascelles, eldest daughter of Henry Thynne Lascelles (qv), the 3rd earl of Harewood and a member of the Canterbury Association.
In 1861 Arthur Mills was working in London with John Robert Godley (qv) for a parliamentary committee of enquiry, just before the latter’s death. In September 1884 Arthur Mills wrote from Exeter to the archbishop of Canterbury of his recent visit to Norfolk Island, in the South Pacific. He supported the priestly ordination and formal appointment as chaplain to the Pitcairn Island community (on Norfolk Island) of the Revd Thomas Pelham Thorman, previously a layman from Plymouth, who on being made deacon by the bishop of Jamaica had served his curacy in Crowan Cornwall. Thorman was ordained priest in 1886 by the bishop of Melanesia.

Of William Drogo Montagu, Benjamin Disraeli the British prime minister remarked: ‘silly but not dull’; and the Marquess of Huntley remarked: ‘a well intentioned bore’. His grandmother Lady Olivia Sparrow knew the father of John Robert Godley very well; she bought land in the colony. E G Wakefield hoped Lord Mandeville might emigrate to Canterbury and be the aristocratic leader in the new colony.

His younger brother Lord Robert (born 1825 died 1902 second son of the 6th Duke of Manchester) converted to the church of Rome in 1870, but reverted to the church of England in 1882.

His younger brother Lord Frederick (3rd son of the 6th duke), of the 12th Foot Regiment, was briefly (from February 1851) a drunken nuisance in Canterbury, and died (1854) aged 26 in Australia.

connections: In 1848 Walter Francis Montagu Douglas Scott (the duke of Buccleuch) grew impatient with the slow realising of the Canterbury Association plans, and sent forty tenants from his Hampshire estates to Natal at his own expense rather than wait longer for them to go to the proposed but delayed Canterbury settlement.

He was a donor towards the missionary College of S Augustine at Canterbury. His wife, the duchess of Buccleuch, once mistress of the robes to Queen Victoria, and in that capacity at the baptism (1841) of Edward Prince of Wales later King Edward VII, converted to the church of Rome in 1855. The family also took an active interest in the Irvingite sect, the Catholic Apostolic church. Its prophetic founder Edward Irving was a Presbyterian minister in Dumfriesshire where the duke was a magnate.

His son Lord Henry John Montagu DOUGLAS-SCOTT-MONTAGU (1885 1st Baron Montagu of Beaulieu) came to Lyttelton in 1853 as a tourist, with the Honourable Schomberg Henry Kerr (second son of the 7th marquess of Lothian and his wife Lady Cecil Chetwynd Talbot, only daughter of Charles 2nd earl Talbot), and their companion tutor the Revd Thomas Bowles. Lord Schomberg Kerr married (1885) the Honourable Victoria Alexandrine, eldest daughter of the 5th duke of Buccleuch, and the sister of his companion on the New Zealand tour; Lord Schomberg Kerr succeeded his elder brother as 9th marquess in 1870. (For Bowles, see http://anglicanhistory.org/nz/blain_directory/)

The Marchioness of Lothian, mother of Lord Schomberg Henry Ker, and only sister of Lord John Talbot of the Canterbury Association, became a Roman Catholic in 1851, in the wake of the Gorham controversy. It further illustrates the high number of conversions to Rome, that two sisters (in 1843, 1892) and a deacon brother (at Littlemore with JH Newman; in 1845) of the Revd Thomas Bowles became Roman Catholics; Thomas himself remained AngloCatholic and unmarried. The second son of Walter Francis Montagu Douglas Scott, Henry John Montagu Douglas Scott married Cecily Susan Stuart Wortley Mackenzie, the youngest daughter of the 2nd baron Wharncliff (his surname: STUART-WORTLEY-MACKENZIE); this family had also married into the Talbot (qv) family. Such inter-marriages constantly indicate the close social connections between the Canterbury Association families, and point to the complex political and commercial alliances made between the old landed gentry and the commercial gentry in the period before universal suffrage for men, and later for women, extended the base of power to include all the people.

A town to bear his title was planned near Alford Forest in Canterbury; Buccleuch was not built.

Connections: Horatio Nelson had inherited the title Earl Nelson from his father. The title had been passed across to his father on the death of the famous admiral, Horatio Nelson, the 1st Earl Nelson, who did not have a legitimate heir.

Through half a century, Horatio (the 3rd earl) Nelson appeared at many official church and state occasions, but not in any very significant role—he was unkindly considered ‘a goose’. Right through to the end of his long life, he was loyal and at hand for annual meetings of such church societies as the SPG.

In 1848, Lord Nelson was present at the opening of S Augustine’s College Canterbury. This was a Highchurch project for the training of clergy for missionary work. Several other Canterbury Association members had connections—especially see William Hart Coleridge, and Edward Coleridge.

In 1851 Lord Nelson laid the foundation stone for the important Butterfield church and AngloCatholic centre of S Matthias’, St. Ogg’s Newington. (Later, Bishop Henry Lascelles Jenner attended services there, and was spied by hostile church members from Otago. For Jenner, see http://anglicanhistory.org.nz/blain_directory/)

In 1854 on the declaration of war against Russia, Lord Nelson appealed to the few Anglican sisterhoods then in existence asking them to send two or more members each for nursing in the Crimea. (See also Sidney Herbert and A Stafford of the Canterbury Association.)

In 1868 Lord Nelson chaired a meeting of the English Church Union to raise support for AngloCatholic clergy, under civil persecution for the use of ceremonies and ornaments that the parliament was opposing. He was an attentive member of the Church Union over many years.

In 1888 Lord Nelson became chair of the Home Reunion Society. This optimistic group worked for the reunion of the church of England with the church of Rome, as well as with the Presbyterian church of Scotland. Lord Nelson’s work in Britain for reunion was seen as parallelling the work of Lord Halifax on the continent of Europe; more consistently, Lord Halifax chose to concentrate on relations with the church of Rome rather than embrace both extremes. (See William Courtenay for more on Viscount Halifax.)

His fourth son the Honourable Edward Agar Horatio Nelson became a Roman Catholic in 1888; his wife the Countess Nelson with their second son the Honourable Charles Horatio Nelson and his wife Ellen, became Roman Catholics in 1896. He personally did not accept his family’s approach of conversion to Rome as a way to church union.

His brother the Honourable the Revd John Horatio Nelson (who joined 1844 the Cambridge Camden (Ecclesiological) Society) married Susan Spencer Churchill (daughter of Lord Spencer-Churchill and related to the Lytteltons) and inherited (1878) a property under the will of his mother Frances Eyre, and retired to that family home, Landford House, Wiltshire. The income from its 1,500 acres was £800 a year in the 1880s. As a comparison: a parish priest in that period might be paid £250 a year, many were paid a smaller stipend, a good few larger.

The River Eyre – his wife’s family name - runs in North Canterbury. Nelson city and province were named after the Admiral Horatio Nelson.

Education: Jesus College Oxford, BA 1812, MA 1815

Canterbury Association: 10 Apr 1851 member, 10 Apr 1851 management Land purchase: Canon John Owen, of Llanbedrog, Pwllheili, Caernarvonshire applied to the Canterbury Association for land, 100 acres on the North Road Christchurch; his friend the Revd Octavius Mathias invested his money for him and looked after his interests. For him, Mathias bought the Desert Station; and Owen’s son John arrived (Mar 1851) on Isabella Hercus in Lyttelton, to manage the station, but unsuccessfully, and he was drowned (1857) in the Rakaia river. Just possibly another son, E. Owen, went on an exploring trip with surveyor JH Baker, to the head of the Waitaki River; he may have bought land at Mesopotamia with a partner J Carter.

Career:
20 Sep 1812 deacon by Bangor (Henry William Majendie)
19 Sep 1813 priest by Bangor
20 Sep 1812-1819 assistant curate to his father at Llaniestyn with Penllech and Llandygwynning
1819-1838 vicar of Conway and perpetual curate of Bodewyd and Gyffin
(25 Dec 1831) daughter Margaret OWEN baptised Conway Caernarvon Wales
1824-1838 rector of Boduan Caernarvonshire
1838 rector of Llanelynnin
1838-1852 rector of Llanbedrog 1852-1868 rector Llaniestyn with Llandegwining and Penllech, Pwllheili, Caernarvonshire (patron the bishop of Bangor); rural dean
1862-1868 canon and treasurer of Bangor JP and deputy lieutenant for co Caernarvon
1868 estate probated at £5 000 to widow Jane Lucinda Owen of Llaniestyn

Connections:
From his father, who died in 1824 he inherited Hendrefeinws.
In 1861 John Owen’s wife Jane Lucinda Owen (1808-1882), with their sons the Revd William Eddowes Owen (Rossall school; MA Emmanuel College Cambridge, curate of S Barnabas’ Liverpool, curate of Glenogwen, Bethesda Bangor North Wales. Born 1834 died 1874), and the Revd Octavius Owen (baptised 28 May 1848 Llanbedrog, died 1879) converted to the church of Rome.

Other children included Margaret Owen (1831-1905); Edward Owen (born 1835) who was a JP in Roxburgh Brixham Devon; General Sir John Fletcher Owen KCB (born 1839) Colonel Commandant Royal Artillery; Thomas Ellis Owen (1843-1900) C.E. Superintendent D.P. Works India; Harriet Owen, who married Thomas Owen Snow of Lache Hall Cheshire.

The son’s name, Octavius, allows the cautious conjecture of a connection of marriage or close friendship with Octavius Mathias who managed Canon Owen’s financial affairs in Canterbury—but note also that a daughter named Lucinda Mary Octavia Owen was baptised 02 August 1846, at Llanbedrog. Allowing the even more doubtful question, did he like the figure eight? Again, was the old priest frail in 1861, and so let his family go to Rome that year? He did not (it seems) become a Roman Catholic. The family crest incorporated a cock confronting a coiled blue snake, above the motto ‘Er gorfod gwilia’, ‘To overcome be vigilant’. But the compiler is far from encouraged by his conjectural suggestions.

Connections: Paul was a marked Tractarian, as evidenced both by his articles in the Lyttelton Times, and his publication after the Gorham Judgment (1850), The Church in Sorrow, Shall we Abandon or Defend Her?. He encouraged Catholic Movement members to remain loyal to the Anglican church when all were unhappy, many felt unsure, and a number were leaving for the Roman Catholic church. (See W Heathcote, J Simeon, RI Wilberforce, and R Cavendish)
Paul was considered a possible local candidate for the bishopric of Christchurch, but only because among the remarkably un-apostolic Canterbury Association chaplains in Lyttelton there was no better candidate. Mary Hobhouse wife of Edmund Hobhouse the Tractarian bishop of Nelson wrote of him perceptively, not long before he returned to England.

Connections:
Pelham Clinton was a close friend of George Lyttelton (qv); at Christ Church Oxford he had been in the group of High church Tories which included William Ewart Gladstone, Henry Edward Manning, and Sidney Herbert (qv). All were outstanding figures in Victorian England. Manning converted to the church of Rome and was later cardinal archbishop of Westminster. The other two were politicians. It is likely that Pelham Clinton got to know JR Godley (qv), Hinds (qv) and perhaps Vernon (qv) during his service in Dublin; he remained a friend and patron of Godley. As secretary of state for the colonies Pelham Clinton had a close relationship with George Grey the governor of New Zealand.

He wrote (1863) to Ernest Hawkins (qv) with a copy to the archbishop of Canterbury, enquiring about the precedent or justification for Longley as archbishop of Canterbury nominating colonial bishops. He noted that previously with Archbishop (John Bird) Sumner (qv) he himself had named a clergyman to him before nominating to the Crown.

In 1863 as colonial secretary he recommended (Evangelical) Mesac Thomas’ appointment as bishop of Goulburn, in Australia. These details illustrate the close attention paid by British political leaders to the appointment of bishops, even in far colonial sees.

The new Oxford Movement won strong support in the Pelham Clinton family of many clergy; members used their position to forward the High church cause. For instance, because his distant cousin the local rector the Revd Charles John Fynes Clinton was fiercely Low church, the Duke of Newcastle (Pelham Clinton) ignored him and his poverty—so stated the family of Charles John. The latter’s son Geoffrey Fynes Clinton migrated to New Zealand and was ordained a priest by Bishop Harper, the 1st bishop of Christchurch. Among a number of AngloCatholic priests in the extended family, the brother to that Revd C J Fynes Clinton, the Revd Charles Henry Fynes Clinton, rector of Blandford Forum Dorset, had officiated at the marriage of Rosalind Fynes Clinton (she was the daughter of his nephew the Revd Geoffrey Fynes Clinton) to the Right Revd ST Nevill, the Tractarian bishop of Dunedin; and his own son Fr Henry Joy Fynes Clinton, was the AngloPapist (1921-1959) rector of S Magnus the Martyr London Bridge. In retirement in Opawa the Revd Geoffrey Fynes Clinton was in regular correspondence with his cousin Fr Henry Joy – his grand-daughter Nora enjoyed bringing in from their letter box in Opawa letters addressed to her father in coloured ink matching the Church season, ‘Ah purple, he wrote in Lent!’

Lord Albert Sidney Pelham Clinton, the 4th son of Henry Pelham Fiennes Pelham Clinton (normally known as the 5th duke of Newcastle), converted to the church of Rome in 1884. The Lady Emily Augusta Mary Pelham Clinton daughter of the 6th duke of Newcastle married the Prince Alfonso Doria Pamphilj of the Palazzo Doria in Rome, and thereupon converted to Rome in 1879. Since the 1960s, by that family’s hospitality, the Palazzo Doria has housed the Anglican Centre in Rome, where a chaplain, library, and chapel serve the relationship between Rome and Canterbury.

S Barnabas’ House of Charity, Soho Square was previously the London home of his wife’s family, the Beckfords. (See Nugent Wade.) William Beckford his wife’s grandfather was a particularly complex androgynne, and curious author. The journals of his exile (after an homoerotic scandal with Earl Courtenay) in Portugal are of persisting interest.

The 3rd son of the Duke of Newcastle Lord Arthur Pelham Clinton was caught in a gay or cross-dressing scandal in London and committed suicide after being charged in the Boulton and Park case.

In Canterbury province, Lincoln town and university bear his courtesy title.

A grandson Henry Pelham Archibald Douglas Pelham-Clinton 7th duke of Newcastle-under-Lyne was a staunch AngloCatholic who spoke on Church issues in the House of Lords. He particularly saw to the design and building of the chapel of S Mary the Virgin in the Clumber House grounds in 1889. The architect was George Frederick Bodley, the glass was by Charles Eamer Kempe. The church’s consecration aroused international comment, for it was decorated with a crucifix on a rood screen, a baldachino over the high altar, a tabernacle for the Reserved Sacrament on the altar. One large banner was for the Blessed Sacrament, the second for the Virgin Mary inscribed S Maria Mater Dei. With the 50 priests and the bishop of Lincoln also came the bishop of Southwell robed in a cope with its hood embroidered with a crowned Madonna and an uncrowned Child. 06 Nov 1889 Derby Daily Telegraph

Connections:
- The diocese of Exeter (which then included Cornwall) and the West Country generally was long a Highchurch Tory stronghold, impregnable under Henry Phillpotts but consistently so before and after him; many of the Canterbury Association people belong in the West Country. He saw himself in the tradition of old Highchurch bishops, and did not go far with the Tractarians.
  - In his political enthusiasms, initially Phillpotts was a reforming Tory, who carefully supported the (Roman) Catholic Emancipation bill in 1829, and followed Sir Robert Peel the reformer.
  - But for most of his over-long public life “Harry of Exeter” (as he was known) carried Tory principles of the extreme right into every aspect of political affairs. The historian of the Victorian church, Owen Chadwick, considers that in his era Phillpotts did more harm to the Christian religion than any other person, prelate or not.
  - In his church enthusiasms, Phillpotts was a relentlessly controversial Highchurch leader. Through his refusal (constant from 1847) to institute a Calvinistic or Low church GC Gorham to a living in Exeter diocese, he precipitated a famous series of trials on the doctrine of baptismal regeneration. Gorham took legal action against his bishop to gain possession of this living. As the judgment from the privy council (the highest civil court in the land) went against Phillpotts and against his commitment to Catholic belief, his refusal to institute Gorham also indirectly precipitated the defection of leading Oxford Movement supporters to the Roman Catholic church. Among these alienated leaders were Canterbury Association members and supporters, notably Robert Wilberforce, John Simeon, and William Heathcote (qqv). Their leaving was a particularly sensitive matter for the Canterbury Association and the topic was avoided where possible in their public face for the Evangelicals.
regularly attacked the Canterbury Association as a Puseyite plot.
Though not a new-style Ritualist nor AngloCatholic, Phillpotts was a strong supporter of the revival of women’s religious orders, particularly at Devonport in his diocese, in which interest he was close to Lord Lyttelton, Lord John Manners, Lord Richard Cavendish, Lord Nelson (qqv), and EB Pusey. In the Plymouth slums, the sisters worked with noble courage among victims of epidemics of cholera, and won respect for Anglican nuns. Phillpotts raised the standard of public worship and in 1844 ordered the surplice to be worn at all ministrations in his diocese; many priests had always worn the white surplice over the black cassock for services, and at the time it was a familiar mark of the old Highchurch school; but plenty more were hostile to this popish (as they saw it) red rag imposed upon them by their bishop.
Phillpotts had a huge income from his holding in plurality (ie all at once) several wealthy livings. Typically he gave £10 000 to found a theological college in Exeter, yet just as typically spent about £25,000 in litigation during his life.
His son George Phillpotts (?1814-1845) was senior lieutenant on the naval sloop Hazard which arrived in New Zealand in July 1844; he was active in the fighting at Kororareka with Hone Heke and Kawit, and was slain. At S Mary the Virgin St Marychurch Torquay the church tower was restored in his memory, cost £3 500.

second daughter of John BULLER of Morval near Penzance Cornwall Education: (1824-1828) the Charterhouse; Oriel College Oxford, 1833 BA 1864 MA
Canterbury Association: 03 June 1848 member
Career:
Tory politician, voted (1846) for agricultural protection; thought ‘a modified income tax the best of all taxes’:
1845-1852 Tory MP East Cornwall Magistrate and deputy lieutenant for Cornwall 1854-1855 high sheriff
1857-1886 recorder of East Looe
patron of Antony, and of Sheviock parishes, Cornwall
1888 estate probated at £8 878 to Reginald Carew Glanville of Truro Cornwall
Connections: The Pole-Carew family strongly supported the Tory Highchurch tradition, and promoted the newer Ritualist cause. The family was related by marriage to the Lyttelton family, the Somers-Cocks family, and the Hulse family, all with members in the Canterbury Association. Pole-Carew’s friend JR Godley (qv) and the family stayed at his famous home, Antony House, while awaiting departure on the sailing ship Lady Nugent for Lyttelton. Himself an acknowledged supporter of the Oxford Movement, William Henry Pole-Carew appointed a Tractarian priest, John Francis Kitson to the family living of Antony. He appointed an AngloCatholic kinsman John James Thomas Somers-Cocks as rector of Sheviock; after the Gorham troubles the Revd John James Thomas Somers-Cocks converted (1856) to the church of Rome. (See Henry Phillpotts for more on the Gorham troubles.) The old loose grouping of the highchurch school held perhaps a majority of the bishoprics during the first part of the nineteenth century. By the 1850s, men (like Walter Kerr Hamilton, bishop of Salisbury) from the new-style Tractarian tradition, emergent from the looser group of the old High church and Tory world, were occasionally getting preferment (appointed to higher posts) in the Church, despite the Court of Queen Victoria being steadily hostile. But in the context of connections researched for this book, it is of interest that the first fully AngloCatholic bishop, Henry Lascelles Jenner, spent his first years as a young priest as curate (1849-1851) in the parish of Antony; the patron of the living was William Henry Pole-Carew. Jenner was consecrated (1866) bishop by Charles Longley (qv) for the ill-defined see of Dunedin, part of Harper’s diocese of Christchurch; anti-Ritualist fears destroyed his chances of enthronement, on constitutional grounds he was (1869) barred from the see. Bishop Jenner always spoke warmly and appreciatively of the early patronage of Pole-Carew.(See the entry for Henry Thynne Lascelles, whose father was godfather to Henry Lascelles Jenner.)

Land purchase Thomas Rowley junior bought 50 acres Barrys Bay nr Akaroa; and for the Revd T Rowley, his father, 200 acres Riccarton Rd Christchurch district where Middleton suburb grew. This initial purchase money possibly came from their father but the two sons farmed in Canterbury, Thomas more successfully than Joseph Cotton Rowley.

1839 DD
1854-death rector Willey with Barrow Shropshire
1877 estate probated at £5 000 by widow Mary Anne Rowley of Willey rectory

Connections: The Canterbury Association committee spoke of Thomas Rowley as dean-designate for the non-existent cathedral chapter in the unformed see of Christchurch. GA Selwyn the bishop of New Zealand resented this pretentious intrusion into his responsibilities, and the proposal of a dean and chapter was dropped until the cathedral was built a generation later, an achievement assisted by Thomas Rowley junior, who served on the original (1859) commission for the building. Thomas Rowley senior never came to the colony but of his very large family two sons farmed in Canterbury. Thomas Rowley junior from 1854 held the Sandyknolls run in Canterbury, and resided at Middleton Grange, Riccarton (in the twentieth century, a school). He married (1857) Marianne Mathias, daughter of Octavius Mathias, the archdeacon of Christchurch, was active in church life including the cathedral commission, was generous in the building of the 1st S Peter’s church Upper Riccarton, was briefly (1861-1862) MHR for Ellesmere, and returned (1864) to England and died (1903) in Southwold Essex.
The third son of Thomas Rowley junior and Emily Mathias, the Revd Herbert Seddon Rowley MA Oxford (born 16 Mar 1861 Riccarton New Zealand died 1927 Kent) was a priest in England; from 1893 he was rector of Wretham co Norfolk, its population (1923) was 260.
John Cotton Rowley, the youngest son of Thomas Rowley senior, married Mary Mathias, the youngest daughter of Octavius Mathias, the archdeacon of Christchurch; this family also returned to England but sustained contacts with New Zealand.
Rowley Peak in midCanterbury took his name; but was renamed Fox Peak and became a ski-field.

Connections: The endowment finances of the diocese of Christchurch are the achievement of Henry Sewell. Sewell arranged that the assets from the Canterbury Association’s ecclesiastical fund were not directly paid out in clergy stipends but re-invested in land as endowments for the church in the future diocese of Christchurch. Sewell personally gave land and helped pay for the building of the church of S Mary the Virgin, Church Square, Addington, Christchurch, New Zealand. It is noteworthy that several of these Oxford Movement families built churches under the patronage of S Mary the Virgin, the distinctive title of the university church in Oxford where JH Newman preached for significant years. In this way they were saluting their Oxford university days, but also noting their appreciation of the ministry of JH Newman and the source of their shared Tractarian sympathies. The Sewell family was well-known as Tractarian, and among the members most notably his sister, Elizabeth Missing Sewell, a school headmistress and writer of Tractarian novels in the style of Charlotte Yonge. His elder brother the Revd William Sewell (1804-1874) was a learned able supporter of the Tractarian Movement (though he drew back as it advanced beyond his Highchurch principles into more enthusiastic or AngloCatholic idiom); he founded (1847) S Peter’s College Radley, where several of the Canterbury Association connections sent their sons, and was a leader in the Cambridge Camden society.
Henry Sewell’s son the Revd William Sewell, while visiting his parents was licensed for services in Wellington.

Connections: This family of Simeon was co-relative with Charles Simeon, the leader of the Cambridge Evangelical revival a generation previous, a founder of the CMS. John Simeon was a college friend of Godley, and a close friend of Alfred Lord Tennyson. In the wake of the Gorham Judgment, and just as the Canterbury Association colonists arrived in Lyttelton, John Simeon (as did his first wife) left the church of England in distress at its perceived betrayal of the Catholic faith and converted to the church of Rome. Subsequently his second wife, and Laura Jane the wife of his second son Edmund Charles Simeon also became Roman Catholics. (See the entry for Henry Phillpotts, for more on the Gorham crisis, a recurring subtext in the Connections of the Canterbury Association members.) At his death Sir John Simeon’s large library sold at Sotheby’s for £3,500, a huge sum. As a comparison: at that time, a parish priest in New Zealand was receiving an annual stipend of £250.

Simeon Quay in Lyttelton has the family name.

1855 returned England

Connections: Of a wealthy family, Captain Charles Simeon deposited £2,000 pounds with his friend JR Godley (qv), for the purchase of land in the colony. He became chairman of the Colonists Committee in England after the first ships departed from Gravesend. On his arrival with a large entourage at Lyttelton on the ship Canterbury in 1851, Charles Simeon (a friend of the Revd John Keble, the poetic inspiration of Tractarians) was appointed magistrate in Lyttelton (vice JR Godley) by the governor, George Grey. He departed (08 December 1855) Lyttelton in the barque Maori for England, and after a long illness died at Hursley, Winchester. Sarah Selwyn, the wife of the bishop of New Zealand, liked him and the family.

Of the large family of Charles Simeon, two daughters married priests, four sons became priests: the Revd Revd Philip Barrington Simeon became Superior of S Paul’s Mission Grahamstown, an AngloCatholic diocese in South Africa; the Revd Algemon Barrington Simeon rector of Yattendon, the Revd Geoffrey Barrington Simeon became vicar Littleham Devon and also was vicar Dunster co Somerset; and the Revd Hugh Barrington Simeon was rector Edburton co Sussex, he married Beatrice daughter of Henry Littledale of Bolton Abbey Yorkshire. A daughter Emma Mary Simeon married the Right Revd Alfred Willis, bishop of Honolulu (Hawaii) until the islands were annexed by the United States of America, and later assistant (informally) bishop in Tonga; he was AngloCatholic and more crucially autocratic. Another daughter Mabel Selina Simeon married the Revd Herbert Andrew Dalton, DD headmaster of Harrison College in the SPG diocese of Barbados, West Indies. Charles Simeon owned land in the area of Christchurch now Barrington St, Spreydon. All his sons bear that name, Barrington, in honour of their maternal grandfather whose male line expired on his death 1833.

Connections: O’Brien Stafford was at Harrow school with JR Godley (qv), and became a more active member of the Canterbury Association. The Noel family was an important Evangelical family.

His sister Sophia Lillias O’Brien married Gerard Noel Hoare, of Mill Hill; the Hoares were an important family in banking and empire, and in the church of England usually as Evangelicals, but later sometimes AngloCatholic.

From 1795 Maynooth seminary for Roman Catholic priests had a considerable annual grant from the Irish (British) government; some, resenting this subsidy for the Roman Catholic church from public funds, urged withdrawal of the grant as being inappropriate sponsorship of the Roman Catholic faith. The argument for and against the continuation of this annual grant to Maynooth raged for years. It became a central issue in the agitation around the extension of full civil rights to Roman Catholics in Great Britain. This had been achieved in 1829 well before the Canterbury Association was in business, but the issue remained tender and regularly in parliament this concern focussed on the Maynooth grant. On the dis-establishment (1869) of the Anglican church of Ireland, one-only capital grant in commutation of the annual endowment income was paid to the Roman Catholic church in Ireland for the sustaining of the Maynooth seminary.

(for more on John Thomas see http://anglicanhistory.org/england/sac/blain_opening2007.pdf)

Connections: John Bird Sumner was as spiritual head of the church of England a suitable president for the Canterbury Association: as an Evangelical among Highchurch people he was brought in for public image (immediately on his appointment to the see of Canterbury) rather than for specific function apart from preaching at the farewell eucharist in St Paul's cathedral London as the first colonists prepared to sail for Lyttelton.

In the House of Lords Sumner voted for the Catholic Emancipation bill (1829), and against the removal of civil disabilities against Jewish people.

After vacillating, in the end he did vote for the Reform act (1832) to extend the franchise a little to a few more men. Sumner was the first party-Evangelical archbishop of Canterbury.

In the controversy over Gorham, he denied that the Catholic belief in baptismal regeneration was a fundamental doctrine of the church. On the strength of that opinion, he used his superior powers as archbishop of Canterbury to institute Gorham into his living in Exeter diocese—over the protesting head of Henry Phillpotts (qv), the Highchurch bishop of Exeter.

John Bird Sumner was (with his brother Charles Sumner) a consecrating bishop (10 August 1856) for HJC Harper as 1st bishop of Christchurch. He was also leading consecrator (29 September 1858) of both Charles John Abraham as 1st bishop of Wellington, and of Edmund Hobhouse as 1st bishop of Nelson.

The central part of the Canterbury plains was named Sumner Plain by Captain Thomas, surveyor for the Canterbury Association before the First Four Ships landed at Lyttelton, but the name did not commend itself.

Sumner, then a town on the north-west edge of Banks Peninsula, now a suburb incorporated in the city of Christchurch, bears his name. Lake Sumner (Māori name Hokakura) is a trout-fishing lake in north Canterbury.

Cecily Susan Stuart-Wortley, youngest daughter of the 2nd baron Wharncliffe married the second son of Walter Francis Montagu-Douglas-Scott 5th duke of Buccleuch (qv) of the Canterbury Association.
The Lady Cecil Chetwynd Talbot only daughter of the 2nd earl Talbot, and thus sister of Lord John Chetwynd Talbot [subject of this biography], married (1831) John William Robert Kerr, the 7th marquess of Lothian:
their son Schomberg Henry Kerr married (1865) Victoria Alexandrina Montagu Douglas Scott, the eldest daughter of Walter Francis Montagu Douglas Scott (qv) the 5th duke of Buccleuch, also of the Canterbury Association.

Education: Charterhouse: Christ Church Oxford, 1827 BA

Canterbury Association:
27 Mar 1848 member, 19 Mar 1850 management committee
Land purchases: Feb 1851—08 Feb 1853 His brother in law, the 2nd Lord Wharncliffe bought town allotments in Christchurch, for whom his son in the colony Lord James Stuart Wortley had power of attorney. The Revd James Pycroft who paid another’s passage to Canterbury was vicar of Barnstaple Devon, of which living Lord Wharncliffe was patron.

Career:
1829 barrister Lincoln’s Inn
1834-1839 recorder Monmouth;
1836-death recorder of Windsor
1843 QC
1844-death attorney general to HRH Edward the Prince of Wales (later King Edward VII of the House Saxze-Coburg-Gotha)
1846-death deputy steward of University of Oxford

Connections: Lord John Chetwynd Talbot, of marked Oxford Movement loyalties, was a co-signatory of the resolution (19 March 1850) against the Gorham Judgment. This privy council Judgment had shaken many leaders in the Catholic revival, to the extent that another group (among them John Simeon, RI Wilberforce, W Heathcote of the Canterbury Association (qv)) soon left the church of England for the church of Rome.

John Talbot’s younger brother Gilbert Chetwynd Talbot had already converted (1838) and later became parish priest (1869-1895) at the church of the Assumption, Warwick St Golden Square Westminster, the leading West End RC church, and later provost (head) of the Westminster cathedral chapter. From 1851, in the wake of the Gorham Judgment, not only John Talbot’s only sister Cecil Chetwynd Kerr, the marchioness of Lothian, but a cluster of the Lothians became Roman Catholic. The marchioness became a zealous promoter of the papal cause in Britain; she died after a papal benediction in Rome, and is buried in the San Lorenzo cemetery. She built the Roman Catholic church at Dalkeith.

After John Talbot’s death (1852), his widow Caroline continued to be an ardent (Anglican) churchwoman, and reliable Conservative. Two of Talbot’s sons married daughters of George Lyttelton. His eldest son John Gilbert Talbot DCL (born 1835 died 01 Feb 1910) married Meriel Sarah Lyttelton, the eldest daughter of George William 4th Lord Lyttelton. His second son Edward Stuart Talbot (1844-1934) married Lavinia Lyttelton, the 3nd daughter of George William 4th Lord Lyttelton. Their son Edward Stuart Talbot was to become warden of Keble College Oxford; and later bishop of Winchester; Edward Stuart Talbot’s able sons included Fr Keble Talbot CR, superior of the Anglican religious order for men the Community of the Resurrection Mirfield Yorkshire. Keble College was opened in 1870; Sir William Heathcote (qv) was the chief money-raiser for this memorial tribute to the Revd John Keble. Lord James Frederick Montagu Stuart-Wortley-Mackenzie, the 3rd son of the 2nd baron Wharncliffe, and thus a nephew of Lord John Talbot was a runholder and partner in Hawkeswood station Nelson province; he returned (1858) to England where he died (1870) unmarried.

A son John Gilbert Talbot (born 1835 died 01 Feb 1910) was MP for West Kent, and then for Oxford University; in 1874 openly attacked the Public Worship Regulation bill, which was persisting in governmental efforts to control church worship and eliminate Ritualists. He was attacked in West Kent and resigned to become the MP for Oxford University, a seat more friendly to Ritualists and continued their MP until 1910. Another, the younger brother was the Right Revd Edward Stuart Talbot, first warden of Keble college Oxford, vicar of Leeds S Peter, and successively bishop of Rochester, bishop of Southwark, and bishop of Winchester.

Talbot Forest is in Mid Canterbury; in the earlier twentyfirst century, a parmesan cheese made in Canterbury was given that name.

1875 estate probated at £16 000 to nephews the Revd Thomas James Thirlwall of Nantmell co Radnor and John Connections: Connop Thirlwall was a learned generous prelate with some feeling for the old High church school but was significantly more individual and Broad church (see Julius Hare). In 1842 he supported the work of the Tractarians against criticism—however he found Dr Pusey a ‘painful enigma’.

With the patronage of Lord Melbourne the Whig prime minister, Connop Thirlwall as a reformist Whig, young to the House of Lords, supported the abolition of Jewish disabilities (1848). A generation later, still in the House of Lords, he supported the dis-establishment of the Irish church (1869)—in diffuse speeches that caused Samuel Wilberforce (qv) the bishop of Oxford to remark that the speeches had ‘made it easy to understand how the bishop’s history of Greece was in ten volumes.’ (The edition I saw in Christchurch in 1999 was in eight volumes, but variance in number is slight when the work itself is so long.) Connop Thirlwall preached in the Welsh language, and with an unusual attentiveness to a bishop’s duties, travelled to the parishes all over his diocese until he was very old and frail. He distributed £40 000 in charity particularly to raise the stipends of the poorest clergy; encouraged building of schools and a training college at Carmarthen; repaired more than 180 churches. Bishop HJC Harper 1st bishop of Christchurch quotes him often in his commonplace book, with approval. This offers insights into Harper’s own faith tradition, as similarly old High church and fairly liberal and open to intelligent reflection.

Career:
17 Jun 1821 ordained deacon by Lincoln (George Pelham) in S Mary Buckden co Huntingdonshire
16 Jun 1822 ordained priest by Lincoln in S Mary St Marylebone London
Connections: A long-term friend to Canterbury settlement and its hopes to found a truer freer Church of England and a kindly feudal society, Charles Martin Torlesse was among those proposed as bishop for Lyttelton. He attended meetings regularly as a member of the Ecclesiastical committee of the Canterbury Association. To the colony, he sent his sons Charles Obin Torlesse, employed (1848) as a surveyor mapping in Canterbury; he worked in Nelson province before farming in North Canterbury. And Henry, later ordained priest by Bishop Harper, who had a brilliant brief ministry with a strong social commitment. His daughters Priscilla and Frances came to Canterbury, where Frances was a church social worker (warmly appreciated by Bishop Harper), and subsequently a founder deaconess of the women’s religious order which later became the Anglican religious order Community of the Sacred Name (CSN). Charles Martin Torlesse urged local honest yeomanry of Suffolk to migrate as well—among the few to accept the suggestion was Charles Merton the village boot-maker, whose sons became important in Canterbury education, music making, and the church; Thomas Merton the twentieth century Cistercian spiritual teacher was a descendant.

The Torlesse range and river in North Canterbury, took his family name; Stoke near Nelson took the name of the village where he was so long the vicar; Sir Charles Ricketts Rowley baronet of Tendring Hall presented (1864) a bell for Stoke, Nelson. S Mary the Virgin church, at Stoke-by-Nayland has a memorial stained-glass window for Charles Torlesse, as well as a number of windows memorial to the nineteenth century Rowley family. Rowleys were patrons of the living.

Connections:
At school with JR Godley, Richard Chenevix Trench at Cambridge was an original member of the Apostles club, a circle of intelligent students which included John Sterling, then an admirer of ST Coleridge and later curate to Julius Hare (qv), FD Maurice, and Arthur Hallam. A mild religious poet (in Latin and English) as an undergraduate, Richard Trench developed into a prolific and wide-ranging writer, and was an early promoter of the work which became the Oxford English Dictionary. He was sympathetic to the Christian Socialism principles of Charles Kingsley.

Richard Trench was briefly curate at Hadleigh to HI Rose an initial Tractarian. He, Arthur Perceval (see William Heathcote for more about Perceval), Hurrell Froude, and William Palmer of Worcester college, were among those who met with Rose at Hadleigh vicarage (July 1833) to plan an initiative later recognised as the genesis of the Oxford Movement. While seen by the Lowchurch Irish Anglicans as seriously Highchurch (as he was, at least in his theology), Richard Chenevix Trench was also strongly influenced by FD Maurice (a liberal and original thinker) in his biblical studies and breadth of outlook. A close friend to Samuel Wilberforce (qv) Trench opposed WE Gladstone's proposal for the disestablishment of the Irish church (1869), as a stripping of the church of its just rights. He maintained his friendship with EB Pusey through all his life. His daughter Edith Chenevix Trench married 1889 Reginald Stephen Copleston, a Ritualist, bishop of Colombo and later bishop of Calcutta in India.

Bishop Harper quotes Trench in his commonplace book, a sign of his respect for him. (The MS commonplace book is in the diocesan archives Christchurch)

Connections: Vaux was a keen member of the Cambridge Camden Society and of the subsequent Catholic revival in the church of England. Meetings of the London Church Union, of the SPG and of other High church missionary groups were organised in his home.
Vaux married Louisa Rivington, whose father Francis Rivington was associated with Wilfred Ward, JH Newman, JB and T Mozley, F Rogers (1871 Baron Blachford, of Ivybridge Devon), and other leading members of the Tractarian party. Rivington became (from 1833) the publisher of the influential Tracts for the Times, of Newman’s Parochial Sermons, and of the British Critic (founded 1792 by William Jones of Nayland and William Stevens, closed Oct 1843) a Highchurch periodical, as well as other AngloCatholic and standard Anglican literature for such as the SPCK. The firm was taken over by Longmans towards the end of the nineteenth century. A John Rivington was admitted to the Cambridge Camden Society in 1843.
His father, the Revd William Vaux was rector (1816-1844) of Sutton Waldron with Long Crichel, Dorset. Crichel was the seat of the wealthy Sturt family (see Francis Baring, and William Baring of the Canterbury Association).
The Revd William Vaux was domestic chaplain to William Howley an old Highchurch archbishop of Canterbury in those decades when most prelates were in that tradition. These connections again indicate the close interweaving over generations of the same families and interests, and in many cases in this book, the Highchurch loyalty. Tory and Church.
The Revd James Edward Vaux (a Cambridge graduate) son of the Revd Bowyer Vaux of Kempsey Worcester, was a curate in London, (1857-1861) at S Anne Soho; and (1859-1867) at S Mary Magdalene Munster Square, one of the pioneering Ritualist churches of London. James Edward Vaux was an assistant editor of the AngloCatholic newspaper, the Church Times, founded 1862, and edited with the significant Ritualist writer Dr RF Littledale The Priest’s Prayer Book. He had also served in S Mary Crown Street Soho a mission chapel founded (1850) with S Barnabas’ House of Charity by the Revd Nugent Wade in the parish of S Anne Soho, in which parish WS Vaux was living.

Vernon (as the Family Background, and Marriage entries on this entry show) was connected with the Lascelles family of Harewood, and the Leveson Gower family. Vernon worked in Ireland with Pelham Clinton (qv), (then Lord Lincoln); this appointment may well have given him the connection to JR Godley (qv) when Godley too was active in Dublin.
The River Eyre runs in North Canterbury. Mt Vernon is above Akaroa on Banks Peninsula, Canterbury.

1893 estate probated at £1689 to Arthur Fenwick Stephenson Wade; he was of De Tillens Limpfield.
Connections: Nugent Wade was a friend of the Revd William Sewell, brother of Henry Sewell (qv) of the Canterbury Association. In this association, he served in the 1840s on the London committee for the founding of the new S Columba's College, Dublin. This public school was intended by its Oxford Movement proponents to be the Irish Eton. Nugent Wade continued with that wider group to participate in William Sewell's next initiative, S Peter's College Radley. His own sons Nugent Charles Wade (born 1842) and Reginald Fairfax Wade (born 1846) attended Radley, as did J Arthur Godley, the son of John Robert Godley.
Nugent Wade was the founder of the S Barnabas' House of Charity in Soho, with a ministry to women in trouble, and a founder of S Mary Crown St, an AngloCatholic centre in a slum district within the parish of Soho.
He made S Anne Soho a gathering place for the new generation of central London AngloCatholics. (see WS Vaux.) Of Nugent Wade's large family, two sons lived in New Zealand. Nugent Charles Wade farmed (from 1879) for a few years at Limehurst in the Waikari Valley, North Canterbury, where he assisted the ministry of the Ritualist priest the Revd JL Keating, and sat in the Christchurch diocesan synod (1880, 1881). Another son, Reginald Wade ('a crazy impractical muddler' as Acland reports) was during the 1870s (and again in the 1890s) manager of the Waireka station in mid-Canterbury.

WAKEFIELD, Edward Jerningham
Birth: 25 Jun 1820 Turin Piedmont Italy
Death: 03 Mar 1879 Old Men's Home Ashburton Canterbury Family Background: only son of Edward Gibbon Wakefield, a founder of Canterbury colony and Eliza Ann
Frances Pattie
Marriage: 03 Oct 1863 (S Peter's Riccarton) Ellen Roe, daughter of a Wellington builder
Education: Bruce Castle School; King's College London
Canterbury Association: 05 May 1848 member, 08 Nov 1849 resigned Land purchase: His brother Felix Wakefield bought 100 acres Sumner, and 100 acres at Riccarton near Christchurch.
Career:
1838 with his father visited Canada
1839-1844 with his uncle Captain William Wakefield visited New Zealand
1845 in Ireland, proposing a settlement in New Zealand
1845 published 'Adventure in New Zealand', and worked desultorily for the New Zealand Company and later the Canterbury Association 1848 published 'The Hand-book for New Zealand'
1850 arrived Lyttelton on 'Lady Nugent'
1853-1855 MHR for Christchurch Country
1857-1861 MPC for Wellington City
1868 editor of his father's letters 'The Founders of Canterbury'
1871-1875 MHR for Christchurch East

Connections: On the early death of his mother, Edward Jerningham Wakefield was brought up by his aunt Catherine Gurney Wakefield, the wife of the Revd Charles Martin Torlesse (qv), in their large vicarage household.

Edward Jerningham Wakefield was sent by his father Edward Gibbon Wakefield to Dublin (Oct 1845) to confer with Samuel Hinds (qv) concerning a proposed church of England settlement. There he was able to work up interest with Irish leaders concerned with the poverty of the peasantry and hopes for immigration schemes to relieve social distress. As his controversial father would have scared people away from the Canterbury Association if he were seen in public, his interests were represented on the Canterbury Association by his son, Edward Jerningham Wakefield. His personality (an 'experienced colonist and drunkard', as contemporaries wrote of him) was too unstable for his considerable talents to achieve anything consistent, and the wild swings in mood and behaviour brought him to steady penury and early death.

The Wakefield Range of mountains is in North Canterbury.

Education:
- Eton; Christ Church Oxford; 1818 no degree
- Canterbury Association: 07 May 1850 member

Career:
- Magistrate for Denbighshire, and deputy lieutenant of Hampshire
- A liberal Tory politician:
  - 1826 MP for Denbigh
  - 1830 MP for East Grinstead until it was disenfranchised under the Reform Act.
  - 1847-1857 MP Denbigh

Residences:

Connections:
- Frederick West’s political career as MP for Denbigh would have brought him into contact with Charles Wynne and other families (possibly including the Revd John Owen?) in the Canterbury Association network. There in North Wales he rebuilt Ruthin Castle from its ruins; in the 1990s it had become a casino.
- From 1846 his first cousin George John (later, Sackville-) West, the 5th Earl De la Warr was patron and friend to Dr JM Neale, the scholar Ritualist priest in East Grinstead, of which constituency Frederick Richard West himself had been the MP. From his Cambridge University years, Neale was a friend of HL Jenner, ill-fated bishop for Dunedin. (See W H Pole-Carew) A cousin of Frederick West, Lady Mary Catherine Sackville West married (1870) Edward Henry Stanley, 15th earl of Derby, who had more political than friendly relations with a number of the Canterbury Association members.
- The Countess De la Warr, wife of the 7th earl, became a Roman Catholic in 1905. I have not found any others earlier in this family who became Roman Catholic. By that late date, the rate of conversions had tailed off and should not be read as related to controversies at the heart of the lives of the Canterbury Association members in 1850.

1846-1863 bishop of Kildare author (1819) Historic Doubts relative to Napoleon Buonaparte and many books on the errors of Romanism, on political economy, logic (using the outline provided by ST Coleridge), and Christian faith Connections: In politics an independent Liberal (Whig), and in religion Broadchurch, Richard Whately was both vehemently anti-Evangelical and later anti-Tractarian, with an unpredictable intelligence which impressed and alarmed all. Whately was at St Alban Hall Oxford with his follower Samuel Hinds (qv), and JH Newman, later leader of the Oxford Movement. As primate of Ireland Whately had an interest in Irish migration, seeing this a chance for the relief of the people starving during the potato famines. He served as a commissioner of National education, there administering united national education in Protestant (ie the Anglican church of Ireland) and Roman Catholic schools. He founded (1831) the political economy chair in Trinity College Dublin; and spoke and wrote against the transportation of convicts; presided (1835) over the royal commission on the condition of Irish poor; spoke and voted for the repeal of religious tests (1833-1853) which had particularly discriminated against Roman Catholics. He also voted for the Maynooth grant (1845) to continue, and so assisted the training of the Irish Roman Catholic clergy; and contributed munificently to the Irish famine fund (1847).
Whately believed that the Irish Roman Catholic priests should be paid by the state, and went further to suggest that they should be paid even from the revenues of the established (Anglican) church of Ireland.
In 1842 his son Edward William Whately (baptised 23 Jul 1823 Halesworth co Suffolk died 1892 Lewisham south London) became a member of the Cambridge Camden (Ecclesiological) Society; he was qualified as a lawyer and also became a priest serving Chillenden co Kent, Bray southern Ireland, Dublin (S Werburgh), and Littleton co Surrey England; (1858-1862) archdeacon of Glendalough, (1862-1872) chancellor the cathedral of S Patrick Dublin. He married in 1869, Ellen Alderson Webb daughter of Robert Webb. Whately Plain, south of Ashburton was by Captain Thomas named after him, but the name did not commend itself. Victoria Street in Christchurch city was originally named Whately Road. (Thomas was the surveyor who worked in the new Canterbury before the first settlers arrived.)

Connections: Robert Isaac Wilberforce was an able colleague at Oriel College with the early Tractarian circle, including John Henry Newman, Edward Bouverie Pusey, John Keble, JB Mozley, Frederic Rogers (later Lord Blachford), Richard Hurrell Froude. (In 1846, Rogers was one of the four founders of the weekly Highchurch paper, The Guardian.) Among the Oxford movement followers, Robert Isaac was one of the most substantial theologians. He was a committee member for the Library of AngloCatholic Theology project. With a commitment to popular education, a trait then familiar among energetic clergy and lay leaders, Robert Wilberforce from 1840 extended the work of the National Society (for providing primary education to the lower classes who could not afford it) in Yorkshire. He opened a school for boys and another for girls in his own garden at Burton Agnes vicarage.
All four sons of the Evangelical standard-bearer William Wilberforce were crucially swayed by the Catholic revival from the early nineteenth century. Three brothers became Roman Catholic, the fourth an Anglican bishop important in the controversies around the Oxford Movement. In 1850, during the Gorham controversy (see the entry for Henry Phillpotts for more about that), the eldest brother William Wilberforce became a Roman Catholic. William had married Mary Fanny Owen, daughter of the Revd John Owen of Paglesham Essex; William was a Tory MP, and was chosen for Hull (1837) in conjunction with Sir Walter James (qv) later a member of the Canterbury Association. William’s son Ernest Roland Wilberforce continued Anglican, and became the 1st bishop of Newcastle-on-Tyne (England).

Robert Isaac Wilberforce’s youngest brother the Revd Henry Wilberforce sent his own son to a Tractarian foundation S Peter’s college at Radley (see Nugent Wade, John Robert Godley, Henry Sewell, all members of the Canterbury Association) with severely inhospitable living quarters and regime, where he died. The Revd Henry Wilberforce directed (February 1849) a postulant to one of the first new Anglican religious orders, the Community of S Mary the Virgin Wantage, a group much influenced by Henry Edward Manning. This young woman Harriet Day swiftly became (1850) the superior of those few Wantage nuns who had not departed for the Roman church during the Gorham troubles. However, in September 1850 the Revd Henry Wilberforce and his wife Mary (daughter of the Revd John Sargent rector of Lavington Sussex and sister-in-law of Henry Edward Manning) were themselves received into the Roman Catholic church. Next year Robert’s dear friend, Henry Manning himself, then the influential (Anglican) archdeacon of Chichester, converted to the church of Rome; in due course he became an outstanding (RC) archbishop of Westminster.

Robert Isaac Wilberforce too was disillusioned by the Gorham Judgment, which he saw as a betrayal of the true identity of the church of England. While wrestling with his conscience Robert went on long visits to consult the Revd John Keble at Hursley vicarage. However following Jane his second wife Robert too now joined (01 November 1854 in Paris) the Roman Catholic church, dying before his re-ordination. (Both Agnes his first and now Jane his second wife had predeceased him.)

The remaining brother Samuel alone did not become a Roman Catholic— Samuel Wilberforce is the subject of the next entry.

His son the Revd William Francis Wilberforce (born 1833 died 1905) was the vicar of Brodsworth near Doncaster in south Yorkshire.

A further connection with Frederic Rogers. The Revd Hugh Hornby Birley, curate of Plymstock Devon bought 100 acres in Canterbury; Birley became perpetual curate (1856) of Hooe, a small West Country living of which Lady Rogers (Georgiana Mary Colvile, of Ochiltree) was patron; her husband Frederic now 1st Lord Blachford was an enthusiastic Oxford Movement supporter.

Connections: Samuel Wilberforce was the most famous son of William Wilberforce the social reformer at the centre of the Clapham sect, a group of wealthy Evangelical leaders committed to social and ecclesiastical reform. An able pastoral administrator with a strong interest in education Samuel founded (1854) the Tractarian theological college at Cuddesdon, he encouraged the formation of sisterhoods (religious orders) and stood with them against popular prejudice, he served (1871-1873) on the council for the new Highchurch foundation Keble College at Oxford. (See the entries for George Lyttelton, and William Heathcote.) He was a leading speaker in the House of Lords. Samuel Wilberforce was one of the most energetic prelates of the nineteenth century, often respected but seldom really liked. He as did his siblings moved far from the Evangelicalism of their parents. While he restrained the more advanced Ritualists from what he saw as excessive Romanising ritual and ceremony, he tended to be a supporter of the Catholic revival in the church of England—provided that such support did not impede his career or check his popularity. He had severe personal stress on that subject for his own brothers and his daughter converted to the Roman Catholic church.

In 1868 in the House of Lords, Samuel Wilberforce argued well for the continuing establishment of the church of Ireland and the church continued established. In 1869 in the House of Lords (after negotiations with WE Gladstone the prime minister) he felt able to argue for the dis-establishment of the church of Ireland and voted for it. The Anglican church of Ireland was disestablished; the church lost its government endowments and subsidies which until then had allowed a small church to weigh heavy on the public purse and the Roman Catholic majority. Among other rather more obvious effects of the disestablishment of the church of Ireland, redundant penniless Irish priests were suddenly available for service in the Anglican dioceses of Australia and New Zealand. These immigrant families brought to New Zealand a bitterness against Roman Catholics; here they were often leaders in the Orange movement in its banner-waving hostility to the Roman Catholic church, and suspicion of any AngloCatholics who might emerge in New Zealand.

In 1872 Samuel Wilberforce was asked by the English bishops to investigate the legality of the appointment of Bishop Henry Lascelles Jenner to the unformed see of Dunedin. He accepted the legality of that appointment, and in a private meeting with Jenner (after he returned from New Zealand, unconfirmed in the see of Dunedin), assured him of his low opinion of Bishop Harper as a weak man. HIC Harper now primate of the Anglican church of New Zealand, had been a vicar in his diocese of Oxford. Samuel Wilberforce was a consecrator (29 September 1858) of CI Abraham as bishop of Wellington, and of Edmund Hobhouse as bishop of Nelson, and indeed a consecrating bishop (10 August 1856) of Henry John Chitty Harper as bishop of Christchurch. He ordained (and recommended to Bishop Harper for Christchurch diocese) the Revd Charles Alabaster, an enthusiastic Ritualist for whom Harper soon had a strong respect and affection. Alabaster provided rich devotional and theological material which Harper incorporated into his commonplace book.

The Wilberforce River is a tributary to the Rakaia River in mid-Canterbury. The northern part of the Canterbury Plains was named Wilberforce Plain by Captain Joseph Thomas (born c1803 Portsmouth co Hampshire), the prevenient surveyor for the Canterbury Association, but the name did not commend itself and was soon dropped.

His son the Revd Ernest Roland Wilberforce (born 22 Jun 1840 rectory Brighstone died Sep 1907 Ducie House Bembridge Isle of Wight) was moderate Highchurch, and W E Gladstone offered him (1882) the new see of Newcastle-on-Tyne; (10 Sep 1907 The Times). His son the Revd Albert Basil Orme Wilberforce (born 14 Feb 1841 died 13 May 1916 Dean’s Yard Westminster) was appointed a canon of Westminster by W E Gladstone, and became (1900) archdeacon of Westminster; his obituarist noted he at first ‘approached the confines of Ritualism’ and while he broadened out, his devotion to the eucharist was central and he testified to the value of sacramental confession; he always held ‘an intense repulsion for Calvinism’ (15 May 1916 The Times).

Connections: On the strength of his pamphlet on church colonization, James Cecil Wynter was the first priest proposed for the projected bishopric of Lyttelton. However, the objection of his wife Mary (died 1852) to colonial life ruled him out. In 1849 George Frederick Boyle, 6th earl of Glasgow, founded the College of the Holy Spirit on the island of Great Cumbrae in the Firth of Clyde. The college, opened in 1851, consisted of five canons and seven choristers, who enjoyed Gothic revival buildings designed by the Tractarian architect William Butterfield in full conformity with the principles of the Ecclesiological Society. James Cecil Wynter was one of these canons; but no information is to hand of the nature of his involvement with this Tractarian semi-monastic initiative. George's cousin and successor, David Boyle, the 7th earl of Glasgow was (1892-1897) governor of New Zealand.

James Wynter's brother the Revd Philip Wynter was from the old-style High church tradition and grew hostile to the development of the Tractarian enthusiasms and challenges to the older tradition. Thus Philip Wynter, caught in his political role as a vice-chancellor of Oxford University, was a leader in the heavy attack (1843) by the University of Oxford on the Catholic revival leader, Dr EB Pusey. Yet Philip Wynter, still a Highchurch loyalist, edited (in 1863) the works of Joseph Hall, a complicated man with a warm devotion to Our Lady, was bishop (1641-1656) of Norwich. His career and actions provide a useful example of how the Oxford Movement had split apart the previous less defined patterns of Highchurch loyalty. The prosecution by leading academics of Oxford of the respected Pusey illustrates the nature of the sharp divisions which the Oxford Movement and the subsequent AngloCatholic revival had meant for the looser loyalties of the old Highchurch tradition. These splits among the Wynters continued and deepened—Philip's son Colonel AL Wynter became a Roman Catholic in 1881; and the colonel's son Guy Wynter became the organist at the Birmingham Oratory, of which the famous Cardinal JH Newman was the founder member. Newman as the vicar of S Mary the Virgin, the parish church of Oxford, was the first inspiration and leader of the Oxford Movement; and his going over to the church of Rome had upset the confidence of his followers. Some followed on into the church of Rome, others stayed back, rebuilt their loyalties to the church of England and put their Newmanite days behind them. Others again copied the faith and practice of the Roman Catholic church, hoping in this way (by replicating the strengths of the church of Rome), those hankering for the church of Rome would now find the same strengths within their own church of England.
